Virginia Action Held Lockout

Norfolk Case Heard in Special U.S. Court

By CHARLES E. MAHON

NORFOLK, Va. (UPI) — An attorney told a special three-judge federal court Wednesday that Virginia's massive resistance program to integration has resulted in "a massive lockout of its own flesh and blood — it's own children."

Edmond Campbell, attorney for 15 white parents suing Gov. J. Lindsay Almond to reopen six schools, closed to prevent integration, said the state is making the children suffer because "the Norfolk school board has complied with the orders of this court."

The hearing followed by one day a referendum in which Norfolk citizens voted 12,658 to 8781 against a proposal that the city ask Almond to return the schools to local control for integrated operation.

Six of Norfolk's seven white junior and senior high schools were closed Sept. 27 after the school board, under compulsion of a federal court order, admitted 17 Negroes. The white parents filed suit Oct. 27.

BRIEFS CALLED FOR ...

The parents named Almond state attorney-general Albertis S. Harrison and the Norfolk school board as defendants.

Campbell's colleague, Archie Boswell of Norfolk, urged the court to declare unconstitutional the Virginia law that automatically shuts down intergrated schools.

The injury to some 10,000 school children locked out of their schools here, he said, "is so severe that the court should not delay one day longer than is necessary to come to a just decision."

However, chief Judge Simon E. Sobeleff postponed an immediate decision on the suit and called for each side to file briefs by Dec. 1. Five additional days were assigned for answering the briefs in court.

STATE COURT TEST

The result was to take the pressure off state officials who feared the federal court would rule out the anti-integration laws before the state supreme court could rule on a "friendly suit" instituted by the state itself to test the laws. This is expeced Monday.

In final arguments Wednesday, Harrison asked for a delay in the ruling. He said the school closing law was not an evasive scheme but was designed to "remove this school temporarily" so the governor could attempt to ease what might develop into a "disastrous situation."

Harrison said the state believed strongly in public education.

Judge Sobeloff commented "what you are saying is that your devotion to the public school system is intact except where an order of the court makes it inconvenient."

TEACHERS AFFECTED

School board chairman John J. Brewbaker testified earlier that the school closing had "demoralized" Norfolk school teachers and that unless the schools were reopened soon, it would be a long time before the bad effect could be overcome. He said makeshift tutoring groups now existing here could not properly educate the displaced students.

Brewbaker said if the schools were opened within the next five days, the students could complete their required 180 days of schooling by sacrificing all Saturdays and holidays.

NAACP attorneys and the state, itself, have filed similar suits to test the constiuionality of the laws. The state contends the federal court has no jurisdiction in the parents' suit until the state supreme court settles a simili rasuit, filed by Harrison. That suit is scheduled for hearing Monday in Richmond.

Resistance Laws Face New Test

RICHMOND, Nov. 23 (AP) Virginia's anti-integration school laws, their constitutionality already under attack in a Federal court, face a new legal test today.

The State Supreme Court will hear arguments in a friendly suit brought by the state itself to test the legality of the massive resistance laws.

Attorney General Albertis S. Harrison Jr. brought suit against State Comptroller Sidney C. Day Jr. to determine the validity of the school closing law and state tuition grants available to parents who object to sending their children to desegregated schools. Day's office would pay out such grants.

Harrison will contend the United States Supreme Court nullified the State's obligation to operate public schools when it knocked down laws requiring segregation.

Day's court-appointed counsel, Lynchburg attorney Samuel H. Williams, will argue that the section of the State Constitution requiring the General Assembly to maintain a system of public schools is still intact.

Williams will also contend that the school requirement section and four other portions of the State Constitution are violated by the fund-cut-off and school closing laws. The tuition grant scheme is tied in with these laws.

Both attorneys have filed briefs in the case.

Virginia Tests Anti-Mix Laws In Own Court

RICHMOND, Va. (UPI) — The state of Virginia goes before its own Supreme Court today to test its "massive resistance" school segregation laws.

The suit is a friendly one, brought by Atty. Gen. Albertis S. Harrison on behalf of Gov. J. Lindsay Almond in an apparent effort to have the laws ruled upon in a state court before they could be brought under fire in federal court.

White parents in Norfolk made a legal race of it, however, by appealing to a three - judge federal court last week to strike the laws down. No decision has been reached in the federal case.

Defendant in the state suit is State Comptroller Sidney C. Day. Samuel Williams, attorney appointed to defend Day, filed a brief contending that closing of schools under the massive resistance laws violated a section of the state Constitution requiring the General Assembly to maintain an efficient public school system.

Harrison argued in his brief that the General Assembly deemed integrated schools inefficient, and that the constitutional provision cannot be brought to bear on a racial issue that has arisen since it was adopted.

Six schools were closed in Norfolk under the segregation laws, along with two in Charlottesville and one in Warren County. Students are being educated in a makeshift fashion that has caused widespread dissatisfaction among parents.

However, voters in a special "guidance" referendum called earlier this month by Norfolk officials were about three-to-two in favor of keeping schools closed rather than opening them on an integrated basis.

Virginia Filing Suit On Itself

To Test Legality Of Massive Resistance Plan

BEFORE STATE COURT

By The Associated Press

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 23. — Virginia's anti-integration school laws, their constitutionality already under attack in a Federal court, will face a new legal test Monday.

The state Supreme Court will hear arguments in a friendly case brought by the state itself to test the legality of the massive resistance plan.

Atty. Gen. Albertis S. Harrison Jr. brought suit against state comptroller Sidney C. Day Jr. to determine the validity of state tuition grants available to parents who object to sending their children to integrated schools Day's office would pay out such grants.

Harrison will contend the United States Supreme Court nullified the state's obligation to operate public schools when it knocked down laws requiring racial segregation.

Conversely, Day's court-appointed counsel, Lynchburg attorney Samuel H. Williams, will argue that the section of the state Constitution requiring the General Assembly to maintain a system of public free schools still is intact.

Williams will also contend that the school requirement section and four other portions of the state Constitution are violated by the fund-cutoff and school closing laws. The tuition grant scheme is tied in with these laws.

Williams and Harrison have filed briefs in the case.

Virginia's package of massive resistance include one which closes schools in which the races are mixed and cuts off state funds. Under those laws, nine schools are now closed, idling about 13,000 pupils.

BYRD IS ADAMANT ON SCHOOL STAND

Senator Upholds Virginia's Anti-Integration Laws as Others Plan Retreat

By JOHN D. MORRIS

Special to The New York Times.

WINCHESTER, Va., Nov. 13 —Senator Harry F. Byrd reaffirmed today his faith in Virginia's policy of "massive resistance" to school integration.

The titular leader of the state's dominant Democratic organization spoke out as previously militant segregationists prepared a retreat.

Mr. Byrd maintained that 60 per cent of Virginia's white parents would not accept integration and would boycott integrated schools.

Integration would mean the destruction of the state's public school system, he contended. He said could be relied on the appropriate funds for maintaining a system to which a majority of the people were opposed.

Senator Byrd's remarks coincided with a proposal by The Richmond News Leader for a local option system that would permit integration in some communities by a referendum.

The paper and its editor, James J. Kilpatrick, have until now been among the most outspoken and influential advocates of total defiance of the Supreme Court's 1954 decree against school segregation.

Perhaps the "ideal" solution, the paper said today, would be for Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. "to pit the sovereignty of the state directly against the powers of the Federal courts" by operating segregated schools in the state's name and in defiance of court integration decrees.

It noted, however, that the Governor had declined to do so. With Virginia's anti-integration laws about to be struck down by the courts, the editorial said, another solution must be devised.

Resembles 1955 Plan

The paper's specific proposal resembled a plan put forward in 1955 by a special Legislature commission. The plan was junked in 1956 at Senator Byrd's insistence on enacting the "massive resistance" laws.

These laws require the closing of any school to which white and Negro pupils are admitted. The Governor must take control of the colsed schols, but may return them to local authorities for operation on a desegregated basis on the formal request of the local governing body and school board.

If a school is thus reopened, however, state funds for operating all primary or secondary schools in the affected community, depending on which type is integrated, are automatically shut off.

Under the News Leader's proposal, integrated schools could be operated in any community where a majority of voters approved them in a referendum. Tuition grants would be made available by the state for the private schooling of children whose parents objected to integration.

The grants would also be available to parents and communities choosing to abandon public schools rather than desegregate them.

"Here lies the way out," the News Leader said. "It can be accomplished legally, honorably and constitutionally (and here we mean 'constitutionally' as the Supreme Court views the term)."

Senator Byrd was not aware of the editorial when he was interveiwed, but he made it clear he would oppose such a plan.

Once the Legislature accepts the Supreme Court's decrees as legal, he held, integration will be forced on one school after another until the public education system is destroyed.

Would Prevent Violence

"Above all," he asserted, "I want to prevent violence. Up to now, there has been no violence in Virginia, and there has been violence in other states where schools have been integrated.

"I pray and hope we don't have violence. But I fear we will if integration is forced upon us."

He recalled that as Governor in 1926 he put through the first state law against lynching. The law classifies any member of a lynch mob as a murderer, subject to thce death penalty.

The Senator had no specific solution for Virginia's dilemma. He noted with satisfaction, however, that most of the 12,700 pupils who had been locked out by state anti-integration laws in Warren County, Charlottesville and Norfolk were being taught in private classes financed by voluntary contributions.

He suggested that if Virginia continued to fight, on the Supreme Court might eventually recognize its "mistake and return to the "separate-but-equal" school doctrine.

"There is nothing political in my position," he said. "I would get out of office if that would prevent the destruction of Virginia's public school system."

However, he contended, the responsibility lies "directly upon the Warren court and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which instituted suits under the decision."

"It is the state that is trying to preserve its school system," he declared. "It is the Warren Court decision, pressed by the N. A. A. C. P., that would destroy it."

Governor Almond said yesterday he would convene a special session of the Legislature to enact substitute school laws if the existing anti-integration statutes were stricken down in court, as now expected.

He gave no hint whether he was contemplating a retreat from his position of opposition to any desegregation.

'Tragic' Becomes Byword For 10,000 Norfolk Pupils

By BRUCE GALPHIN
Constitution Staff Writer

NORFOLK, Va.—In discussions of the school crisis here, the word "tragic" is heard again and again. It is an apt one.

For in the massive chess game of power between the State of Virginia and the federal government, the unfortunate pawns have been some 10,000 Norfolk school children.

Second of three articles on the Virginia school situation. The concluding article Tuesday will be on Charlottesville.

The three high schools and three junior highs that ordinarily would house these pupils were shut down last September when Gov. Lindsay Almond threw Virginia's "massive resistance" laws against a federal court order to admit 17 Negroes.

In the intervening two months, the state has found no way to reopen the schools on a segregated basis, and it has refused to accept any integration.

As a result, Norfolk's school children have had to continue their education by whatever means available.

For some, this has meant no school at all. For others, it has meant commuting to other Tidewater area schools or moving completely out of the area.

Almost half the displaced students are attending informally organized tutoring groups, but these will come to an end in January.

What happens after that, to put it mildly, is uncertain. Cases now pending in state and U.S. courts are expected to outlaw the massive resistance laws, but it is possible that Virginia might abandon public education rather than accept integration.

In any case, irreparable harm already has been done the displaced 10,000. The Norfolk school system has been badly demoralized, and the whole city may suffer industry-wise if the shutdown continues.

Norfolk's current troubles began a couple of years ago when some 150 Negroes petitioned for admission to white schools.

The school board was able to delay the crisis for some two years through court and administrative action.

School board psychologists carefully screened the 150 Negroes, as they do white pupils asking to be transferred from one school district to another. Eventually, the candidates were winnowed down to 17 who were considered academically, emotionally and socially prepared for the change.

NO ORGANIZED PROGRAM

Even then the school board argued against integration on the grounds it would "isolate" the 17 Negroes. But the U.S. District Court ordered integration to proceed. And that was when Almond closed the schools.

The theory underlying massive resistance was that by assuming control of the schools himself, the governor could stymie the federal government with the power and prestige of his office and reopen the schools on a segregated basis.

It became apparent to the governor and his advisers that this would not work, however, and the schools are still shut.

Unlike Charlottesville, Norfolk has had no organized program to take care of its displaced students. A prosegregation group, the Tidewater Educational Foundation, attempted to found a progra mbut has had little success.

MAY LOSE TEACHERS

For the most part, parents and pupils organized small, one-teacher tutoring groups.

One of the most touching sidelights of the school closing has been the interest of pupils themselves in education. In a surprising number of instances, the children took the initiative in organizing the tutoring groups. And parents in many cases report a heightened interest in school work on the part of their children.

The children have had a chance to see that education is a precious thing.

Almost all the teachers for the tutoring groups are those from the six closed schools. Because they have year-long contracts, they are still receiving pay from the school board and thus have been volunteering their services or charging only nominal fees.

But the contracts expire in June. And teachers already have served notice they do not intend to continue tutoring after January.

There are between 4,200 and 4,500 Norfolk students in tutoring groups. Another 1,621 have transferred out of the Norfolk district (there are no open white high schools in Norfolk, and the one remaining junior high has no additional space).

There are 948 enrolled in an adult evening school.

Unaccounted for and apparently not enrolled anywhere are between 2,500 and 3,000 white children.

That means that about 75 per cent of the displaced pupils either are not attending school or are in nonaccredited classes.

J. J. Brewbaker, superintendent of the Norfolk schools, has declared that "these boys and girls at best will enter colleges only under great handicap." Colleges, he said, will look on their applications "with great misgivings?"

Most good colleges require 16 Carnegie units (given by accredited schools) for admission, Brewbaker said.

Closing the schools would "very much and very seriously affect the future job opportunities" of children not planning to go to college, Brewbaker added.

Paul Schweitzer, business executive and chairman of the Norfolk School Board, reported another serious result of the closing. "Teachers are asking me by the dozens," he declared, " 'What B-3—TRAGIC ... ⅜ nca ho(csF shall we do about next year? Shall we leave the system or the state?' "

Schweitzer said this was the first year Norfolk had been able to recruit a full, adequate teaching staff.

Mrs. Mary P. Johnson, past president of the Norfolk Education Assn., testified in federal court that "teachers have a greater feeling of insecurity than the pupils." They are particularly worried about retirement benefits, she said.

"We're going to lose these teachers an dthe State of Virginia is going to lose them," Brewbaker warned.

Do all these bad effects on the schools, plus the reported harm being done Norfolk's attempts to gain new industries, mean that citizens would prefer some integration to no schools at all?

That is by no means certain.

The Norfolk school board petitioned the city council to request Gov. Almond to return the schools to local control. The city set up a referendum on the matter.

The pro-segregation Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties campaigned against the proposition on grounds it represented "abject surrender of your children to various pressure groups and professional race-mixers" as well as "wholesale destruction of your community."

The Defenders also contended that reopening the schools would still require substantial fees of parents.

The Norfolk Committee for Public Schools, on the other hand, argued that unless the schools were opened, teachers would leave, industry would not come to Norfolk and that "only the wealthy will be able to educate their children."

The referendum to reopen the schools on an integrated basis failed, 12,340 to 8,712.

Many reasons have been given for the outcome.

The vote turnout was small, as is typically true in Virginia. There was a note on the ballot saying that integration would cause the loss of state and federal support; many contended the note was false. It also was argued that many young parents were not registered to vote, and that much of the city's Naval personnel were excluded.

The next act in the Norfolk drama will come within about two weeks, when both the State Supreme Court of Appeals and the U.S. District Court are expected to rule on tests of the massive integration laws.

Meanwhile, 10,000 children are without schools.

Solon accuses Byrd group of plot to destroy schools

ALEXANDRIA — A Virginia legislator Monday revealed what he called a plot to destroy the public school system of the state, accusing the Byrd machine as instigators of the plan.

Making the accusation, Del. John C. Webb of Fairfax, said: "The people of Virginia had better wake up right now to the absurd lengths the 'massive resisters' would go to avoid compliance with the Supreme Court's ruling."

He further declared that, "To say that schools should be closed or abolished in the name of protecting 'State's rights' is pure hogwash."

NAMING NAMES, Delegates Webb said the leaders in the "underground" campaign are Sen. Harry F. Byrd (Dem., Va.), Rep. Howard W. Smith (Dem., Va.), William M. Tuck and Watkins M. Abbitt.

Although he did not disclose his source, Webb said he is convinced of the accuracy of his report.

The Byrd machine, according to Webb, is only waiting until after the State Supreme Court of Appeals hands down its decision on Virginia's "massive resistance" laws to put into action a plan to abolish public schools.

THIS WILL be done, he claims, by the calling of a special session of the General Assembly.

At the special session of the General Assembly, Webb said that legislation will be introduced to repeal Section 29 of the Virginia Constitution.
ia Constitution.

Section 29 states that "the General Assembly shall establish and maintain an efficient system of public free schools throughout the state."

SENATOR BYRD and Representative Smith could not be reached for comment on Webb's charges, but Abbitt said such a move, "in all probability," should be started.

He denied, however, knowing anything about a move to abolish public schools in an effort to evade integration.

But Abbitt reiterated his previous stand that "there must not be any integration at any time."

All Tuck had to say about the charges was that "I am not a party to anything other than to keep schools segregated."

AND GOV. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. said:

"I am so used to the rantings of Delegate Webb and his quest for publicity that I feel further comment is unnecessary."

But the governor told some 700 delegates to the annual convention of the Virginia Congress of Parents and Teachers on Monday:

"AT THE appropriate time, if it becomes necessary, I will assemble the General Assembly and endeavor to the best of my ability . . . to work out as best a solution as possible from this pressing situation which beats down upon us.

"But I say to the people of Virginia and the Federal Courts that the present Governor of Virginia will not assign white and colored children to be taught in the same schools."

Earlier, Governor Almond appealed to Virginians to "condemn" bombings and threats against synagogues, schools and churches.

He said that he believed that the bombings are "inspired by Communists," adding that Virginia has "no room, no feeling, no sympathy for John Kasper or the Ku Klux Klan."

MEANWHILE, some 13,000 pupils in Norfolk, Charlottesville and Front Royal are still out of school because Almond ordered them closed rather than obey the courts' order to desegregate.

Moderates are beginning to give support to Webb's call for a protest against "the plot" to destroy the public schools."

Webb warned, however, that any protest would result in a "tough fight."

Legislators, on the other hand, privately have been critical of Webb's statement, wishing to keep the school issue hush - hush until after the Nov. 4 elections.

Adding further woe to pupils now out of school, Arthur S. Flemming, Secretary of Health and Welfare, recently warned that pupils attending the makeshift private schools will face a serious problem when they try to enter college.

IN OTHER notable events taking place Monday, the Norfolk Education Association unanimously voted to discontinue a "stop - gap" tutoring program for children out of school.

The 700 members voted to discontinue the program at the end of the semester because they believed the program would defeat its purpose and become permanent.

At the same time the teachers started a survey, asking parents whether they would favor reopening the schools in accordance with a Federal court order directing admission of 17 colored pupils to six white schools.

AND AWAY from the school issues Arlington Unitarian Church services were interrupted Sunday morning when an anonymous phone call was received, threatening to bomb the edifice.

Police are now investigating the threat and will make a report to the County Board on Saturday.

Following the threat, the church goers filed out of the building under the directions of church officials, and services were postponed.

Philadelphia Inquirer

RICHMOND, Va., Aug. 4 (AP).—A Federal judge—ordered by a higher court to fix a definite date for desegregation of schools in the "black belt" county of Prince Edward—today set September, 1965, as a tentative date.

This seven-year delay granted by District Judge Sterling Hutcheson was hailed by Virginia political leaders as a victory. Negro attorneys declined to comment.

IN COURT SINCE 1955

Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, representing Negro parents in the case, had asked for this September as a date for compliance with the Supreme Court's desegregation decree.

The Prince Edward case was one of the five school segregation cases on which the Supreme Court based its historic 1954 decision calling separate schools unconstitutional. The case has been in Federal District Court for implementation ever since.

Judge Hutcheson made it plain the period of delay he specified could be reduced or extended by him "in accordance with what may develop in the future."

ALLOWS 10 YEARS

He said he was expressly reserving this flexibility "because of the uncertainty of conditions during the interval and the absence at this time of a sound basis" for the conclusion that conditions would stabilize in the years ahead.

Hutcheson said he was fixing the date at 10 years from the 1955 decision in which the Supreme Court ordered compliance "with all deliberate speed" with its opinion of the preceding year.

TO ORDER QUICK START

He said he would order the defendant school board to make "an immediate start in the necessary preliminary steps looking to the formulating of a plan, with directions that on or before Jan. 1, 1959, the defendants inform the court concerning progress to that date."

In Washington, Sen. Harry Byrd (D., Va.), said the seven-year delay was "very gratifying." Byrd is regarded as the author of Virginia's program of "massive resistance" to school integration. Under State law, any school that is integrated is closed.

ALMOND IS READY TO CLOSE SCHOOLS

Bars Integration in Virginia and Says Troops Would Find Empty Buildings

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., Aug. 21—Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. urged Virginians today to support him and the legislature in the state policy against any racial integration in public schools.

He disavowed defiance, but he said that if troops were sent into Virginia, "they will patrol empty school houses."

The Governor made his views known at a news conference in response to questions about President Eisenhower's statement of yesterday.

The President said it was the "solemn duty" of all Americans to comply with the Supreme Court's order to end racial discrimination in public schools.

At his press conference today, Governor Almond said education was "a state matter," and asserted:

"It's our responsibility to work it out to the best of our ability. I am convinced that the mixing of the races in the public schools would destroy the processes of education."

Bars Forced Integration

He declared:

"Our concern is for the preservation of education so that all the children of Virginia will have the best educational facilities and opportunities the state can afford. It cannot be done through the mixing of races in schools. There will be no enforced integration in Virginia."

The Governor said he had "no spirit of defiance," and that upholding the United States Constitution was "of just as much concern" to him as to the President.

He also said, his "obligation to uphold the law and order" was "a matter I will diligently observe."

He reiterated his belief that the Supreme Court decision on school integration violated the Federal Constitution in that school matters were for the states to handle.

Referring to Virginia's law closing any integrated schools, he said, "In my conviction that is the only course for Virginia to pursue."

Special to The New York Times.

NORFOLK, Va., Aug. 21—The chairman of the Norfolk City School Board conceded in Federal Court here today that at least three Negro students had been refused admission to white schools on the basis of race.

The chairman, Paul Schweitzer, made the admission in response to questions from attorneys representing fifty-three Negro students who have asked the Federal District Court to direct the school board to admit them to previously all-white schools this fall.

The three children involved in the specific admissions by the board chairman are Patricia Godbolt and Johnnie Anita Rouse, who have requested admission to Norview High School, and James A. Turner, seeking admission to Norview Junior High School.

In the course of the first day's hearing on the fifty-three cases, the school superintendent, J. J. Brewbaker, testified that "ew are not ready" for racial integration of schools.

He did say, however, that he would recommend the admission of Patricia Godbolt in 1959 if he knew the school board would have a year of conferences and educational work to "pave the way."

Mr. Brewbaker and Mr. Schweitzer testified that their concern was with education under the "best possible conditions." Mr. Brewbaker also said he did not think it would be fair to place the Godbolt child in a position of "feeling unwanted."

"If she were white," Mr. Schweitzer said in answer to a question, "she would have been admitted readily." Mr. Brewbaker later testified that the pupil's scholastic record was excellent.

He also told Judge Walter E. Hoffman that he felt the girl would have a "very, very difficult time" if she were put into the white school now. He cited previous racial conflicts in the area of the Norview school.

All Negroes Rebuffed

The Norfolk School Board announced Monday the denial of transfers to the 151 Negro students who had applied for admission to previously white schools.

Eighty-eight had complied with the school board's pupil assignment plan by taking written and oral tests.

On Tuesday and Wednesday attorneys filed suits on behalf of fifty-three students asking that the court direct the board to assign the Negroes to the schools for which they had applied.

Judge Hoffman has indicated that he will act on the merits of each case and plans to hear all evidence before Labor Day even if night sessions are necessary. He has set Aug. 27 as the deadline for the filing of additional requests by students for court action in the assignments.

VIRGINIA PLANS PRIVATE STUDY

New Orleans States

Four Areas Ordered to Integrate Are Ready

By THOMAS JOHNSON

RICHMOND, Va. (AP)—Closing of public schools in four Virginia localities because of enforced integration apparently would trigger the operation of schools blueprinted by private groups.

State charters have been issued to private school corporations in Prince Edward county, Arlington county and the cities of Norfolk and Charlottesville.

The oldest of these corporations is the Prince Edward Educational Corp. which came into being in 1955 after the United States supreme court handed down its decisions in the five original school segregation cases. One of these cases involved Prince Edward's public schools.

More than a year ago the corporation announced it had completed plans for the operation of private white schools if the public schools were closed because of integration.

ACTED QUIETLY

The activities of this private nonprofit group of white citizens moved quietly against a background of announced determination of the Prince Edward board of supervisors to close public schools rather than submit to integration.

The board's stand was taken months before Virginia's legislature enacted the massive resistance, no-integration school program under which integration automatically would close a public school.

The state's program provides for the governor to try to reorganize a closed school on a segregated basis. Should he fail in this, he is empowered to decide whether the school shall be returned to local control for operation on an integrated basis. But the request for such return must come from the local governing body and school board.

Operation on an integrated basis would mean the loss of state school funds to the locality.

TEACHERS ARRANGED FOR

The Prince Edward Corporation said it had obtained agreements with teachers and principals in the public schools to teach in the private system.

Too, it said it had arranged for classroom facilities in churches, buildings of private and civic organizations, private homes and warehouses.

Also arranged were provisions for transportation, lighting, books, lavatory and lunch room facilities, as well as the curricula.

Within a few months after launching its drive for support in the spring of 1955, the corporation said it had collected more than $10,000 in cash and received some $190,000 in pledges for support of the private school system.

TO AID PRIVATE SCHOOLS

The three other private school groups are of more recent development, as is the Co-ordinating Committee to Maintain Efficient Education in Virginia.

The 19-member committee, headed by Lewis S. Pendleton Jr., 38-year-old Richmond attorney, was organized in May to aid local groups in establishing private school systems should public schools be closed because of integration.

Arlington, Charlottesville and Norfolk schools have been ordered by federal courts to desegregate in September. Federal district Judge Sterling Hutcheson, acting on a request of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) for a definite date in the Prince Edward Case, has ruled the county's schools must be desegregated beginning in the fall of 1965.

In Norfolk, the Tidewater Educational Foundation came into being last June.

NORFOLK ALSO ACTS

James G. Martin IV, an attorney, said when it "became evident that some of Norfolk's schools would be closed, we started from scratch to build a private school system."

He said the Foundation was organized "for the purpose of providing our children, whose education of the same high caliber which they have enjoyed in the public school system of the city.

A five-member executive committee includes, in addition to Martin, te president of the city's Parent-Teacher Council, its past president, a high school history teacher and another attorney.

BLUEPRINT DRAWN

The Foundation's blueprint calls for a five-member school board, a school superintendent, a board of finance, a school district activities headquarters to work with school district councils, a logistics office over buildings and maintenance departments, a speakers' bureau and a legal department.

The city's 55 churches are being asked to make facilities available prior to September. If the facilities become available, Martin said the foundation then will begin the school organizing process. Effort would be made to obtain public school teachers whose schools were closed.

Financing would be sought from state tuition grants, membership dues of $1 a year from interested citizens and if necessary, Martin said, "major private donations from civic-minded individuals."

(Tuition grants have been authorized by the Virginia Legislature for the payment of the tuition of children in private schools where (1) the public school they attend has been closed by integration or (2) they have expressed a preferenc of attending a private school instead of a locally operated integrated public school.)

The Charlottesville Educational Foundation is a city-wide group chartered as a non-profit corporation which plans to operate tuition grant-supported private schools if public schools are closed.

FACILITIES STUDIED

Chartered in mid-July, this group is engaged in a study of available facilities and teachers.

Meanwhile, an independent group of patrons at Charlottesville's Venable elementary school has announced it is ready to provide temporary facilities for about 200 pupils if Venable is closed. The group said it will finance its own program, will not incorporate and will not seek state tuition grants.

In Arlington, the 10th (Congressional) District Educational Corp. attempted to operate a "model school" in a private residence in July to show how it could be done if public schools were closed by integration. Its proposed school building failed to pass inspection by county officials, however.

Arlington also has seen the organization of the committee to Preserve Public Schools which says it will "pursue every legal means to keep public school open." Its organizers include leaders from liberal and conservative factions in county politics, and its chairman, O. Glenn Stahl is a former school board member.

Governor Rejects Proposal to Interpose Pupil Act in Norfolk Dispute

RICHMOND, Sept. 3 (AP).—State laws cannot relieve Arlington, Charlottesville and Norfolk of their responsibilities to Federal Courts, Gov. Almond told his press conference yesterday.

All three communities are under Federal Court orders to desegregate.

The Governor's comment on the legal situation came when he was asked about a suggestion from the pro-segregation Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties that Virginia use its pupil placement act to protect Norfolk from a Federal Court order requiring integration.

He rejected the idea, declaring that Norfolk, Charlottesville and Arlington are under the "coercive powers" of the Federal courts. Federal judges have said no State law can relieve those school boards of their responsibility to the courts—a responsibility determined by the courts, Mr. Almond said.

Will Enforce Fund Laws

He again emphasized, however, that Virginia's school-closing, fund-cutoff laws would be enforced. He said he was preparing notices to advise local school boards whenever a particular school is closed. Virginia law automatically closes any school where integration takes place.

Asked if he would accept decisions by Federal courts to invalidate the placement law and possible other anti-integration measures, Gov. Almond replied:

"You might have the power to jump on me and give me a thrashing, though I wouldn't recognize your authority to do it. . . .

"On the question of Federal power, this State can't secede from the Union. . . . Virginia has no desire for it. . . .

"We can be overcome and submerged by Federal powers but we don't have to accept it because it was arrogated, assumed. . . .

"But what can you do in the face of overwhelming power? You certainly don't accept it, but you might have to take it between the eyes."

Not Aware of Weakness

The Governor said there had been suggestions from some source that there had been "recalcitrance on the part of the Governor" in not invoking the Pupil Placement Act as an instrument of interposition against desegregation decrees. He said he was not conscious of any weakness of his part.

"Now in a contest of power between the State and Federal Government, the power of the Federal Government prevails. It is my conviction that the Supreme Court did not have the authority under the constitution of the United States to make the decision it made; it arrogated authority and translated it into power."

Also on the placement law idea, he said "we must recognize that no State could require any citizen to confine himself to State judicial remedies in the solution of a Federal question involving his rights, "Gov. Almond declared.

Negro students seeking admission to white schools all have proceeded through the Federal courts, claiming their constitutional rights are being denied.

NOT TO BREAK LINE

Schools Warned By Virginia Chief

Fla. Times-Union
Jacksonville, Fla.
Fri. 9-5-58

RICHMOND, Va., Sept. 4 (AP)—Gov. J. Lindsay Almond firmly advised local school boards involved in federal desegregation cases today to steer clear of making any assignments of Negro pupils to white schools.

In a policy statement read to a crowded press conference and then dispatched by uniformed state troopers to Norfolk, Charlottesville, Prince Edward and Newport News, Almond said no federal decree from the U. S. Supreme Court on down can require such an affirmative action of a locality.

Moreover, he asserted, the state Pupil Placement Act has stripped local boards of their assignment powers and given them to the central State Pupil Placement Board.

"Misconception"

Almond's policy declaration was prompted, he said, by what appears to be a misconception of the responsibility, authority and accountability of school superintendents and local school board members. And he said that in refusing to assign pupils a board could not properly be held in contempt by federal courts.

The governor conceded the federal court had the "power" to cite the school boards for contempt for refusing to assign pupils but said such action would be a usurpation of authority rightfully belonging to the state.

He was asked if this meant Norfolk should reverse its announced intention of assigning 17 Negro pupils to white schools under the pressure of a federal district court order.

"Precisely that," Almond said. He added that neither should Norfolk ask the federal court to dissolve the state injunction against local assignments.

The view of the governor, a former judge who as attorney general carried the state's fight against school integration, was that the federal decrees, based on the Supreme Court decision, are all negative in nature—telling you what you can't do, such as barring school children because of race—rather than affirmative decrees telling you what you must do.

Almond indicated if any assignments of Negroes to white schools which would result in closing schools under state law were to be made, they would be made by the federal courts, rather than by the localities. He said the courts have the "power" to make the assignments, as distinguished from the constitutional authority.

And he suggested the localities wouldn't want to find themselves in the position of being accused of taking voluntary action toward breaking the state's line of massive resistance.

The five localities to which the policy statement was dispatched by state troopers are under federal court orders to desegregate their schools.

RICHMOND

Virginia's Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Friday shed crocodile tears over the closing of Virginia schools under the state's massive resistance program and then switched to the 'Big Lie' technique to label a Cabinet member's criticism of the closing as "Federal-NAACP propaganda."

Earlier in the week Secretary of Health Education and Welfare Arthur S. Flemming deplored the school closings as harmful to the future of the affected pupils, pointing out that continued closing of their schools would make it difficult, if not impossible for them to obtain credit for the current semester.

IN REPLY, Almond, who is directly responsible for the closing of the schools under state laws which were passed to evade compliance with the U.S. Supreme Court desegregation ruling, said he deplored the closing as much as Flemming, and declared:

"But Mr. Flemming deplores the effects, when the Administration of which he is a servant established the cause."

He then reaffirmed his position on massive resistance, stating:

"I have not weakened . . . I do not intend to weaken," from the view that desegregation "would destroy public education in many areas."

Pointing to the District of Columbia schools, which were among the first to desegregate after the Supreme Court order, the Governor continued:

"I wonder if Mr. Flemming has assessed and evaluated the effects of the mixing of the races in the schools of the District of Columbia.

"He has jurisdiction there, and it would be very interesting to know what he thinks about the ever-increasing exodus of white children from the District of Columbia — and the effects on the educational process of the mixing of the races in the Washington schools."

But, They Aren't Saying What Happened Behind Closed Doors

Va. Pupils Parade Before Board!

By ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

WASHINGTON—It was a silent parade of parents and children who appeared before the pupil placement board in Arlington for interviews prior to the opening of schools. During a two-day period, 27 of the 31 Negro children who had applied for admission to white schools faced the "gun" of the Virginia Placement Board. The other four were away on vacation but hope to be interviewed at a later date.

The board representative, Birchell S. Hilton, talked with each family group separately.

The hearings were closed to both the press and attorneys representing the students. Arlington County School Superintendent Ray E. Reid sat in with Hilton but refrained from asking any questions. His administrative assistant, Howard R. Bovee, said he asked a few questions each day.

MEMBERS OF the press who were barred from the conference took refuge in the corridor of the Arlington Trust Building, which houses the Placement Board, awaiting to pounce upon each family unit as they entered, hoping to get some statement or at least an indication on how they felt about this procedure. But the silent parade marched on, saying nary a word. They completely ignored the flicker of photographers' flash bulbs and the grinding of TV cameras, as well as the reporters' questions.

Atty. James Nabrit III, who is associated with the Frank Reeves law firm had joined the press group to make sure that the clients carried out the orders of their attorneys "not to talk."

Nabrit explained that he is not an official attorney in the case, but was assigned to this task by his senior law partners. The reason for the "silence" he indicated was fear that the case might have to go to court and any statement made might be used against them.

Nobody would reveal their names, nor the ages of the children. They would not say what grade the child was in or to what school they were applying for admission. No comment was made on the number of type of questions asked—just silence.

ONE FATHER did break down and tell reporters that the quizzer asked why he wanted his 11-year-old son to transfer to a white school. He said he was also asked what his attitude was toward the Negro school which his son attended previously. But he added there was no pressure put on them to change their minds.

In one instance, when a parent refused to utter a word, a reporter asked if he was "taking the fifth" (amendment). The father replied, "I have the 'fifth' in my pocket."

Frank Reeves, one of the attorneys in the case, was on hand when the hearings opened Monday but left soon after the first boy was interviewed for a conference with the child to determine what occurred during the ten-minute session with the child and his mother.

LATER, Otto Tucker, an Arlington attorney who was transporting some of the children to the Placement Board, indicated that the questions were apparently aimed to find out whether the applicants felt that their constitutional rights were being violated.

The children were also asked, according to Tucker, why they wanted to attend white schools and if they expected to participate in club activities. They were further questioned on whether they were applying on their own or upon advice of counsel.

Birchell Hilton, representative for the Pupil Placement Board, refused to discuss types of questions when asked, but insisted that they were "fair." He denied that they were being examined to determine the scholastic ability of the children or even to test their IQ.

Superintendent Reid was very congenial to members of the Negro press. He implied that he was opposed to integration, but that he felt it was bound to come. Specifically he stated that many changes had been made in the past few years and he felt that many more would come, whether you agreed with it or not.

He pointed out, however, that the Pupil Placement Board was set up by the state government and was operating as a state agency, and that he as a county superintendent had nothing to do with it. But, he added, any student desiring to change schools, whether Negro or white, must be interviewed by this board, which makes the final decisions.

Arlington policemen are undergoing special training on how to handle the situation in case a riot should develop during the opening days of school. It was stated that jail cells were being emptied and law enforcement officers have promised to throw into prison any person who comes into that vicinity for the specific purpose of inciting trouble.

THE ARLINGTON County School Board announced a gradual desegregation program in January 1956. The General Assembly retaliated against Arlington's program by taking away Arlington's right to elect its school board members. Since that time the Arlington School Board has been inclined to go along with the state in segregation matters.

Virginia, Arkansas Near Climax Of School Segregation Battles

By The Associated Press

Virginia has joined Arkansas in the front lines of the South's struggle against public school integration by federal court order.

A showdown on whether Dixie's tradition of racial separation will be upended now, later or not at all is in the making in both states. It should come by mid-September at the latest.

The most potent weapon brandished by the segregationists is a threat to close the schools to ward off race mixing.

A Virginia test on this point moved a step nearer Friday at Norfolk. The school board there bowed to an 18-month-old U. S. court order and assigned 17 Negroes to white schools for the session starting Sept. 8.

A federal judge earlier had designated five Negro pupils for enrollment Sept. 4 in white schools at Arlington, Va., a Washington suburb.

The pointed significance in both actions is that when Negroes are enrolled in a white school in Virginia the school automatically is closed by state law.

The next step might well be a new round of federal litigation over this law, which has been enacted in similar form by several states. More of the delay for which Southern segregationists are battling could follow.

The Norfolk School Board at the same time asked U.S. Dist. Judge Walter E. Hoffman to delay until September of next year the enrollment of the Negro pupils. It said time is needed to prepare citizens and officials for "the profound changes."

Hoffman made no immediate response. He indicated he would refuse the request unless the U. S. Supreme Court at its extraordinary session Sept. 11 permits a 2½-year delay at the Little Rock, Ark., Central High.

A lull, which could be the calm before another storm, prevailed at Little Rock where Central High was integrated last year under the watchful eyes of soldiers.

Members of the Legislature have gone home after arming Gov. Orval E. Faubus with a package of anti-integration bills, one of which would permit him also to close a forcibly integrated school.

Another would again postpone the opening of Central High, this time until Sept. 15—four days after the Supreme Court meeting. The school's start already had been put off from Sept. 2 to 8.

Faubus delayed signing these and others of the measures as a "matter of strategy."

He did sign an act holding the Legislature under call for any further emergency action until Feb. 10, start of their regular session.

The Supreme Court's Sept. 11 session will be to decide whether to void an 8th Circuit Court of Appeals edict for immediate integration at Little Rock and let stand a U. S. District Court order for a 2½-year delay, or vice versa.

The high court heard three hours of argument in a rare emergency meeting Thursday before recessing and calling for the later arguments.

Gov. Almond Moves Into Spotlight As Virginia Showdown Nears

By MARY LOU WERNER
Star Staff Writer

Move over, Gov. Faubus!

Make room for a rising new star on the national segregation scene—Gov. Almond of Virginia.

For every word Gov. Faubus has uttered about Federal meddling and integration, Gov. Almond has five—and a lot longer words at that.

He personifies the novelist's idea of Southern statesman, with his thundering oratory and mane of silver hair that falls across his florid face as he speaks.

Gov. Almond's commentary so far has not received as much national attention as that of his Arkansas counterpart, but his time is coming as Federal courts bear down on Virginia's no-integration stand.

Master of Words

By September 2, when some Virginia schools are due to open Gov. Faubus may be hard put to defend his role as the South's best-known champion of segregation.

There are few orators around today who can match the Virginia chief of State word for word.

He is a master of metaphor and poetic polysyllables. The hominy grits manner of speaking that has served Gov. Faubus so well is not for Gov. Almond.

In his inaugural address last January, Gov. Almond characterized the Federal Courts as "judicial surgeons" who had "prescribed a massive bloodletting." He went on:

"Weakened by this cynical phlebotome, enervated by sweet anesthetic, the States are declining to the insignificant role of dependent Federal satellites—mere municipal provinces of Washington, suburbs of the capital."

Knows Constitution

Gov. Almond can give a lengthy argument on constitutional government to support his State's segregation stand at the drop of a magnolia. He is an expert on constitutional law. It is just that he and the Supreme Court do not see eye to eye on interpretation.

From the speaker's platform, a listener unschooled in constitutional government and five-syllable words is apt to get the idea Gov. Almond is something of a stuffed shirt.

He is quite the opposite with reporters at press conferences. The meetings are friendly, informal affairs, with the Governor and reporters talking easily together.

He calls reporters by their first names, and usually has a few jokes to exchange. When sensitive questions are asked he can come back with an answer right away—even though the reporter sometimes is left wondering just what it was he wanted to know in the first place.

Reporters who cover his press conferences regularly sense that the Governor likes to match wits with them, and confess that all too often the Governor comes out on top. Even so there is a genuine affection among members of the Fourth Estate for the man they knew for years as attorney general before he moved to the executive suite at the State Capitol.

Gov. Almond's home town is Locust Grove, Va.; in Orange County. His 83-year-old mother still lives on the family farm there with another son. Gov. Almond's father, who died in 1936, was a locomotive engineer for the Southern Railway.

The boy who one day was to run his State in a time of great crisis grew up like most farm boys. In 1923, he received his law degree from the University of Virginia.

After moving to Roanoke to practice law, the energetic, ambitious young lawyer quickly moved through the chairs of political success in Virginia—assistant Commonwealth's Attorney, Hustings Court Judge, congressman, attorney general, and then Governor.

Carries the Burden

Now 60, Gov. Almond is Virginia's chief executive at a difficult time. By his election campaign, he is committed to a course of "massive resistance" against integration. He has promised to do his best to preserve public education in Virginia, but has vowed that this cannot be done by permitting integration. The State's anti-integration laws put the burden of coping with the school crisis on the Governor's shoulders by giving him discretion to say if a school closed by integration can be reopened by a locality.

One thing stands out in Gov. Almond's pronouncements when contrasted to words of Gov. Faubus. The Virginia Governor repeatedly has said he foresees no occasion for violence in his State—the reason being, of course, that Virginia laws provide for the closing of schools if integration—or Federal troops—come.

When his current four-year term ends Gov. Almond cannot be a candidate to succeed himself, but no one believes he is anywhere near retiring from politics. The United States Senate is his most likely future aspiration.

Unlike some of his colleagues in the Virginia Democratic organization who turned their backs on President Truman, Gov. Almond stuck by his party. And he had the audacity to comment.

"There are things in the Democratic Party with which I disagree, but I think we can do more to correct these things by remaining in the party than by going outside. . . . The only sane and constructive course is to remain in the house of our fathers—even though the roof leaks and there may be bats in the belfry, rats in the pantry, a cockroach waltz in the kitchen, and skunks in the parlor."

Virginia Paid $195,000 In Tuition for Negroes

RICHMOND, Dec. 16 (AP)—Virginia paid $195,000 to help 575 Negro students pursue graduate studies in 40 subjects at 55 out-of-state colleges and universities last year.

The annual report of the graduate aid fund, administered by President Robert P. Daniel at Virginia State College, showed that more than half the recipients used the grants for advanced courses in education.

Others studied for advanced degrees in such subjects as agriculture, architecture, art, biology, chemistry, dentistry, engineering, journalism, law, medicine, music, nursing, pharmacy, psychology, sociology, veterinary medicine and zoology.

Columbia University appeared to be the most popular among the aid recipients, with 202 students enrolled. New York University had 119 and Howard University had 50.

Aid grants are made available each year to Negro students seeking advanced work that is offered in Virginia's state-supported colleges for whites but is not available at Virginia State Colleges for Negroes.

Virginia Integration Fight Began in '52

By Mechlin Moore
Staff Reporter

The question of admitting Negroes to white schools in Virginia was raised first in its present form after World War II.

Initially, it was a fight to bring the Negro schools up to the standard of white schools in those areas where there were particularly wide disparities between the two systems. This was under the old Plessy doctrine which called for "separate but equal" facilities.

The issue quickly changed, however, to a struggle for the elimination of racial barriers to education wherever they existed.

The issue now has been joined in widely separated part of the Old Dominion with cases before the Federal District judges in the state. It has produced two special sessions of the legislature and become a major state political issue in the administrations of four state governors.

Here are significant dates in the background of this week's events in Virginia:

Nov. 15, 1947—Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People representing Negro parents in impoverished King George County asked Federal Judge Sterling Hutcheson to force construction of schools for Negroes equal to those used by whites or admit the Negroes to white schools. Hutcheson ordered King George to provide equal schools for both races and the schools were built.

Feb. 25, 1952—A suit was brought to allow Negroes to enter white schools in heavily-Negro Prince Edward County, as the NAACP shifted its goal from equalization to non-segregation. A three-judge Federal Court later ruled for separate schools, calling segregation "one of the ways of life in Virginia."

May 17, 1954—The Supreme Court combined the Prince Edward case with others (District, Delaware, Kansas and South Carolina) and handed down its momentous desegregation decision. "In the field of public education the doctrine of separate but equal has no place," the court said. No date was set for desegregation to begin.

Virginia's Gov. Thomas B. Stanley immediately said he would appoint a bi-racial commission to work out a plan "in keeping with the edict of the Court." Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.) said the state was facing a "crisis of the first magnitude."

Aug. 28, 1954—Stanley, in a shift of position, appointed an all-white, 32-member commission of State legislators, headed by segregationist State Sen. Garland Gray of Waverly, to make plans for Virginia.

May 31, 1955—The Supreme Court reaffirmed its desegregation decision and called for a "prompt and reasonable start" toward compliance. It left District Courts in charge of deciding when to desegregate local areas, but called for "all deliberate speed."

Nov. 12, 1955—The Gray Commission reported a program of tuition grants and local assignments to prevent "compulsory integration." Gov. Stanley called a special legislative session.

Dec. 3, 1955—The special session voted to hold an election on amending the state constitution to permit tuition grants for private schooling.

Jan. 9, 1956 — Virginians voted two to one to hold the convention.

Jan. 14, 1956—The Arlington School Board announced plans for limited desegregation under the Gray program. The General Assembly soon removed from Arlington the privilege of an elected school board. Arlington later abandoned the desegregation plan.

Mar. 6, 1956—The constitutional convention amended Virginia's constitution to allow for tuition grants from public money.

May 7-17, 1956—Suits were filed to desegregate schools in Arlington, Charlottesville and Norfolk.

May 31, 1956—Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond demanded that Gov. Stanley call another special session to pass a state program to meet the Supreme Court's desegregation decision. "I have fought to the end of my legal rope . . . I need something with which to fight," he declared.

July 12, 1956—Federal Judge John Paul told Charlottesville to begin desegregation by Sept., 1956. "I am not willing that this court be a knowing and willing accessory to a policy which has as its purpose delay and evasion . . ." The order was later suspended pending appeal.

July 23, 1956—Stanley, in another shift, shelved the Gray plan and offered his own program to withdraw state funds from integrated schools. "There shall be no mixing of the races in the public schools anywhere in Virginia," he declared.

July 31, 1956—Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan ordered desegregation of Arlington's elementary schools by Jan. 31, 1957 and high schools by September of that year. Desegregation was later delayed pending appeal.

Aug. 25, 1956—Sen. Byrd called for "massive resistance" and urged fight against integration "with every ounce of our energy and capacity."

Sept. 21, 1956—Special session called by Stanley passed fund cut-off law, tuition grants, state pupil placement act taking assignment authority from localities, anti-NAACP laws and a bill to close integrated schools.

Dec. 31, 1956—The Fourth Circuit Court upheld District Court desegregation orders in Arlington and Charlottesville. Delays were granted pending appeal to the Supreme Court.

Jan. 11, 1957—Federal Judge Walter E. Hoffman declared the State Pupil Placement law "unconstitutional on its face" in the Norfolk case.

Jan. 23, 1957—Judge Hutcheson postponed indefinitely desegregation in Prince Edward County.

Feb. 12, 1957—Judge Hoffman ordered Norfolk to desegregate by Aug. 15. Order was held up pending appeal.

Mar. 25, 1957 — Supreme Court refused to review decisions to order desegregation in Arlington and Charlottesville.

July 13, 1957—Fourth Circuit Court upheld Hoffman's Norfolk desegregation order.

July 27, 1957—Judge Bryan ordered Arlington to begin desegregation in September, 1957.

Sept. 14, 1957—Judge Bryan ordered Arlington to admit seven Negro children to white schools in Arlington. Bryan said they need not submit to Virginia's placement procedure. Order to desegregate was deferred pending appeal.

Oct. 21, 1957 — Supreme Court refused to review Norfolk case, leaving desegregation order in effect.

Nov. , 195' —Attorney General Almond elected Virginia's Governor on a "massive resistance" platform.

N[illegible]1, 1957—Fourth Circuit Court directed Judge Hutcheson to set a date for desegregation in Prince Edward County. Supreme Court later refused to review.

Feb. 12, 1958—Fourth Circuit Court upheld Bryan's Arlington desegregation order. Supreme Court later refused to review.

May 12, 1958—Judge Paul ordered Charlottesville to desegregate this September.

June 7, 1958—Judge Hoffman ordered Norfolk to desegregate this September.

July 23, 1958—Gov. Almond announced he would follow the law in not allowing schools to open where Negroes have been assigned under a final court order.

Aug. 4, 1958—Judge Hutcheson granted a seven-year delay in desegregation of Prince Edward County schools.

[illegible] 26, 1958—Judge Paul [illegible] Negro applicants in Ch[illegible]lle to take achievement tests, required by the School Board, and [illegible]ted the board to report [illegible] court.

Aug. 28, 1958—Charlottesville postponed school opening until Sept. 15.

Aug. 29, 1958—Facing attempt action, the Norfolk School Board told Judge Hoffman it would reluctantly assign 17 Negroes to white schools. School officials asked Hoffman to delay enrollment of the Negroes for another year but he later denied the request. The opening of schools was postponed until Sept. 22.

Sept. 2, 1958—Gov. Almond reiterated his intention to prevent the opening of schools to which Negroes had been assigned.

Sept. 2, 1958—Hearings on the Arlington case opened before Judge Bryan. The list of those seeking admission had grown to 30, affecting seven schools. The School Board told Bryan it had rejected all Negro applicants. School opening was postponed from yesterday to Sept. 8.

Sept. 3, 1958—Attorneys for six Negro children asked Judge Hutcheson to order their admission to white schools in Richmond. This followed similar requests covering Warren County and Newport News.

Sept. 3, 1958—The Arlington School Board defended before Bryan its denial of the applications. Attorneys for the Negro children attempted to prove they were denied because of race.

Sept. 4, 1958—Gov. Almond told Norfolk's School Board not to carry out the assignments of Negro pupils to white schools. He said Federal courts cannot force localities to admit Negroes to white schools, although the courts can prevent discriminatory assignments.

Sept. 4, 1958—Judge Bryan permitted Arlington to reopen its schools on a segregated basis pending the Supreme Court's clarification in the Little Rock case of its 1955 ruling that desegregation must proceed "with all deliberate speed."

Sept. 5, 1958—Fourteen Negro children requested immediate admission to Alexandria white schools.

Sept. 5, 1958—Judge Paul directed the Warren County school board to admit 22 Negro pupils to the county's only [illegible] school at Front Royal.

Almond's School Policy Statement

Following is the text of a statement made by Virginia's Gov. J. Lindsay Almond yesterday at a press conference. The statement also was delivered to school authorities in Arlington, Charlottesville, Norfolk, Prince Edward County and Newport News.

There appears to be some misconception as to the responsibility, authority and accountability of district school superintendents and local school board members who are parties defendant in cases now pending in the Federal District Courts.

The heavy burden of grave responsibility devolving upon the Governor of this commonwealth impels the following statement:

No decision of the Supreme Court of the United States or any subordinate Federal court requires, or can require, this state or any of its political subdivisions to operate any public school whether integrated or not.

No such decision nor any state law requires any parent to send a child to an integrated school.

On Supreme Court

What the Supreme Court has said and all that it has said is that as to such schools as may be operated and maintained by state and/or local government no child may be excluded where the controlling factor for such exclusion is that of race.

The decrees in every case are decrees of injunction which restrain exclusion and are not decrees of mandamus compelling the operation of any school or the admittance, assignment or enrollment of any child. The decrees are in the negative and not in the affirmative.

No Federal court is vested with authority under the decision of the Supreme Court to direct, compel or coerce any defendant District Superintendent or school board to assign or enroll any pupil in any school, or to do any affirmative, administrative act pertaining thereto. The court may assume the power but lacks the authority to make the assignment or enrollment itself.

On School Boards

Aside from the lack of authority of the court to make the assignment or enrollment, the local school board has been totally divested of all the authority it once had. This authority resides solely in the Pupil Placement Board. Whether the assignment made by the Pupil Placement Board would be respected by the court is beside the point.

Refusal of the local board to make assignments, an affirmative act not directed by the injunction decree, could not properly be adjudged in violation of the decree and thus form the basis for contempt proceedings.

Assignments made by a local board would not only be ultra vires (beyond the scope) of the authority of the board but would be in violation of state law. Superimposed upon these considerations, such affirmative act of assignment would constitute a voluntary act on the part of the local board bringing upon it the onus of creating the condition which would invoke the applicable statute closing the school.

On State Courts

No school board is faced with the necessity or is under any obligation to seek relief at the hands of any Federal court from the binding effect of injunctions from state courts of competent jurisdiction enjoining such boards from assigning or enrolling pupils.

Since a Federal court has no authority to direct a school board to violate such state injunction, a violation would be susceptible to the construction that it was voluntary and willful.

I personally know and profoundly respect the integrity and ability of able counsel for the various school boards. As a lawyer, I know the office, function and obligation of counsel to client. I trust that the view of able counsel will be found in harmony with this statement.

It is after deliberate consideration and thought that I have concluded that the obligation of duty and official responsibility impels me to make it.

On Schools' Straits

I am fully cognizant of the desperate straits—not of their own choosing—in which these boards find themselves. I share their distress and applaud their honest efforts and their loyalty and devotion to our common cause to save public education for all of the children of Virginia.

I am deeply concerned that no decision justifiably made at this local school board level will be of the overwhelming majority of the citizens of Virginia and thus in favor with the representatives of the people and the General Assembly.

I am solemnly committed and irrevocably pledged to do everything within my power to defend and preserve public education for all of the children of the Commonwealth.

Irrefutable evidence abundantly abounds that the mixing of the races in our public schools will isolate them from the support of our people, produce strife, bitterness, chaos and confusion to the point of destruction of any rational concept of a worthwhile public school system.

Almond Emissary Denied Court Entry

The State of Virginia in the person of a State trooper went to Alexandria Federal Court yesterday, but couldn't get in because it was too crowded. State Trooper [illegible] W. Johnson of Richmond, carrying two identical letters from Gov. Lindsay Almond Jr. to Arlington School Supt. Ray E. Reid and State Attorney General Albertis S. Harrison, was first disarmed by a United States Marshal, then denied entry.

The Marshal delivered the letters which told school officials the Court couldn't order them to make "voluntary" school assignments. "That's O. K. by me," Johnson said. "Just so I know the letters were delivered."

Pupil Placing Gets Approval In Alexandria

Race Discarded As Reason for Denying Admission

By JOHN M. ROSSON
Star Staff Writer

The Alexandria School Board announced today that it has drawn up and approved a pupil placement plan it expects to follow in the event it is ordered by Federal court to admit 14 Negroes to white schools.

The plan discards race as a reason for denying the students admission to city schools.

The board told Alexandria Federal Court today that the criteria it would use in deciding on the admission of the 14 applicants would be:

1. Location of their residences in reference to the nearest school.
2. Condition of enrollment at the school pertaining to availability of space.
3. Past academic achievement and level of mental maturity to be determined by tests "possibly in time for the current year and between July 15 and August 15 of succeeding years."
4. Evaluation of health factors influencing attendance, alertness, wholesomeness, mental capacity and acceptability.
5. Social stability.
6. Eligibility as to actual residence, whether living with parents, in-laws, friends or guardians.

The list follows closely the criteria outlined by other Virginia communities, including Arlington, whicch is under Federal Court order to admit four Negroes to a white school next February.

Commonwealth's Attorney Earl F. Wagner, school board counsel, today filed an answer in Federal Court to a list of contentions submitted last October by attorneys for the 14 Negro applicants.

Five Schools Involved

The students asked Judge Albert V. Bryan to forbid the school board from denying them immediate admission to five white schools, Patrick Henry, Ficklin and William Ramsey elementary schools, and George Washington and Francis Hammond high schools.

In a list of allegation, the students' attorney, Frank Reeves, said the admissions should be granted "immediately" because the board has admitted it is operating the city's schools on a segregated basis and has failed to adopt any plan of action for racial desegregation.

One school spokesman, referring today to the answers filed by Mr. Wagner, said "That is not true now."

Judge Bryan has not set a date for hearing the Reeves motion.

Closing Law Threat

If the Alexandria admissions are ordered, school officials would be faced with the State law which provides for the closing of any integrated school. The statute is now being challenged, however, by the State itself to determine its legality.

Under the Arlington placement plan school officials denied applications by Negro students to all but one white school with court approval. The ruling was based on five criteria which excluded race as a reason for denying admission.

Similarly, the papers filed today by Mr. Wagner said the Alexandria school board "recognizes that applications by the 14 students for placement in certain schools previously attended by white pupils should be acted upon without regard to race or color."

It was added, however, that the board also "realizes that it has the responsibility of treating all public school pupils alike in furnishing them the best possible educational opportunities within the ability of the board, and to avoid assignment of any child to a grade level or school which does not suit the degree of his present scholastic achievement."

Criteria Announced

As a third responsibility, the board maintained it must "operate all the schools . . . with full regard to the proper interest of all pupils, and must not burden any class or school by assignment thereto of more than a just . . . number of students in consideration of existing enrollments . . . and availability of space. . . ."

The board told the court the criteria it would use in deciding on the admission of the 14 applicants would be:

1. Location of their residences in reference to the nearest school.
2. Condition of enrollment at the school pertaining to availability of space.
3. Past academic achievement and level of mental maturity to be determined by tests "possibly in time for the current year and between July 15 and August 15 of succeeding years."
4. Evaluation of health factors influencing attendance, alertness, wholesomeness, mental capacity and acceptability.
5. Social stability.
6. Eligibility as to actual residence, whether living with parents, in-laws, friends or guardians.

The board said "no pupil affected by the criteria would be enrolled except by affirmative act of the school board, which would in all cases exercise its proper discretion in making such assignments in view of all pertinent facts, but, without regard to race."

Virginia Fights To Stall Mixing

Negro Girl Fully Qualified, Norfolk Official Tells Judge

NORFOLK, Va. (UPI) — Norfolk School Board Chairman Paul P. Schweitzer admitted under oath today that his school board turned down a Negro girl's application for admittance to a white school because of her race and for no other reason.

Schweitzer made the statement before a packed and intense courtroom in U. S. district court where Judge Walter E. Hoffman was going over case-by-case the rejected applications of 53 Negroes who asked for admittance to white schools in this city.

His admission brought a gasp of surprise from a largely Negro audience of about 250.

Under questioning by NAACP attorney Oliver W. Hill, Schweitzer said the girl, Patricia Godbolt, had met scholastic requirements for admission to white Norview High School here.

He also said she made a "very remarkable score" on a California achievement test; her health was good; she showed an ability to get along with people and she lived closer to Norview High than to the Negro school she attended last year.

"Very definitely this (case) number five (Patricia Godbolt) meets all the requirements. If she had been white, she would have been admitted readily," Schweitzer said.

The school board chairman's testimony came at the opening of today's hearing in which Hoffman began consideration of applications of 53 Negroes who asked that their rejected requests for white schools be reviewed. Patricia Godbolt's application was the first to be considered.

SEES LONG SESSION

He promised to go over all of the applications before him "even if it takes a night session," and told attorneys for both sides he was convinced, "we will be here together for the next week to 10 days" to finish the work.

The 53 Negro students were among 151 turned down for entrance to white schools Monday night by the city school board despite Hoffman's order that the city desegregate before schools open here Sept. 8. The board did not accept any Negro applications for white schools.

Hoffman indicated he would review still more of the rejected applications if they are filed in his court before next Wednesday at 10 a. m. EST. More students were expected to ask that their applications be reviewed.

Hoffman indicated, in the brief hearing Wednesday, that the board might have erred in turning down 24 of the applicants who met minimum scholastic requirements for admission to the white Norview High, junior and elementary schools. The board said it rejected the applications chiefly because of "racial conflicts" in the Norview area.

Hoffman observed that U.S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley's 2 1-2 year stay of integration at Little Rock had been reversed, and Lemley had based his decision on racial conflicts in Little Rock. Hoffman said he thought "in the light of that reversal," the Norfolk school board might want to "reflect further" on the 24 applications.

Segregation Group Loses Try To Block School Mixing Plan

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — A state judge refused Wednesday to restrain the Norfolk School Board from proceeding with the possible assignments of Negro pupils to white public schools.

"This court cannot act until the school board does enroll children in the schools," said Circuit Judge Claude H. Jacob.

Norfolk, ordered by Federal District Court to desegregate its schools in September, sought to satisfy the court by setting up a local assignment plan that involved local aptitude tests.

But a segregationist group moved to block the procedure on the ground that Virginia law now gives all pupil assignment power to a central state pupil placement board. State law also provides for automatic closing of any public school in which the races may be mixed.

The petition for a temporary injunction had been filed by Mr. and Mrs. Coleman H. Coley, white residents of Norfolk, who have two daughters.

Lewis S. Pendleton Jr., of Richmond, the Coleys' attorney, contended placement and enrollment powers had been removed from local school boards by state law and vested exclusively in the pupil placement board.

W. R. C. Cocke, counsel for the school board, replied that the board has not assigned or enrolled any Negro pupils in the schools.

Pendleton said the school board's assignment plan, based on a series of tests and interviews with Negro applicants for white schools, evades and disregards state law.

Cocke said the school board does not intend to disregard state law; that it has not assigned any pupils, and that it merely attempted through the plan to determine which Negro children are eligible for admission to white schools.

The school board attorneys recalled that Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman has said he might hear each Negro applicant individually. "We cannot predict what he (Hoffman) will do, but he has the power to direct that the pupils be received in the schools," said Cocke. "There is no way to stop him from doing that."

One-hundred and fifty-one Negro pupils have applied for admission to white schools here and 89 of them have submitted to the tests and interviews provided in the school board's assignment plan. The school board has said it would make no assignments until Hoffman acts on a motion—to be heard Monday—that he declare the Norfolk assignment plan invalid. The motion was made by attorneys for 21 Negro pupils who boycotted the school board tests.

VIRGINIA SCHOOLS IN 'KIND OF CHAOS'

State Education Chief Says Integration Crisis May Put End to Public System

By LAWRENCE FELLOWS

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 9—Dr. Davis Y. Paschall, Virginia Superintendent of Public Instruction, declared today that the struggle between the state and the Federal Government over putting white and Negro children in the same classrooms had brought a "kind of abysmal chaos" to the state school system.

"I do believe," he said, "the sudden impact of this thing will retard our public school system, if it doesn't destroy it completely."

However, he added, there was just an outside hope that, should the crisis suddenly be resolved, some good might come of it.

Under a policy of "massive resistance" to the Supreme Court ruling against segregation nine public schools of the state have been closed. The aim is to keep fifty-one Negroes out of the schools, but it also keeps nearly 13,000 white pupils from going to school.

More Closings in View

There is a prospect that more and more schools of the state will be closed. If the only alternative to integration is no public education it is the only acceptable one to much of the state.

In Dr. Paschall's office the assistants o both races concede that time is hardening the lines between white and Negro, that the integration issue is arousing all the old racial prejudices and passions.

In the curriculum workshops and other conferences where school officials of both races meet and work out common problems there is an atmosphere that hampers a free exchange of ideas.

Dr. Paschall had, until today, refrained from speaking out in the controversy.

"My responsibility," he commented today, "is not to say whether the people will or will not have schools. That is a matter for determination by the people. I have profound faith in the rank-and-file of our people.

"It is in that faiththat I find my hope. I sometimes think that if this is a blind faith then it's in my limitation rather than in the potential of the people themselves.

"There will be thousands in the profession who would say I am escaping from the responsibilities of citizenship. Those people have not been close to the crisis in its deepest implications.

'Many Ramifications'

"The issue is dee pand has many ramifications and is one that has no easy solution, really. So much of this can be learned only through experience. It is difficult even to talk about it."

In offering his remarks, he said, he was prompted by the "concern of a professional educator" over the strain that was being put on the state's school structure.

Dr. Paschall directs a system of public education that had its inception in 1870 and grew to have more than 800,000 pupils in more than 2,500 buildings, nearly 28,000 teachers and 2,500 principals and superintendents.

Last year, even with fifty schools being built and eighty-five being enlarged, the number of schools was reduced as small, inefficient schools were closed and their pupils transferred to newer and larger schools.

The integration crisis came along as Dr. Paschall was pressing a program of reducing the number of pupils per class and reducing the number in half-day or two-shift sessions.

He was also reaching out into the rural areas to raise their level of education. Last year 376,357 pupils were taken to their studies in buses that traveled an aggregate of 35,832,041 miles.

The expenditure for public schools in Virginia last year was $201.707.738.42.

COURT ACTION BY STATE

Counsel Urges Removal Of Virginia Race Laws

RICHMOND, Va. (AP)—Virginia's massive resistance laws should be struck down as violating both the state and federal constitutions, defense counsel in the state's test case said Thursday.

Samuel H. Williams filed with the state Supreme Court his answer to the mandamus petition brought by Atty. Gen. A. S. Harrison Jr. against Comptroller Sidney C. Day Jr. The suit is a friendly action instituted by the state.

Williams, a Lynchburg attorney, was appointed as counsel for Day by the Supreme Court. Briefs are to be filed early next month. Oral arguments are scheduled for Nov. 24.

At issue are the validity of the state's school closing, fund cut-off and tuition grant laws.

Williams contended that the massive resistance laws violate the Virginia constitution by depriving the localities of possession and management of their own school buildings and equipment.

He said one section of the state constitution is violated in that local communities are deprived of their school properties without due process of law.

Another section is violated, Williams said, because some of the massive resistance laws constitute special, rather than general, statutes for assessment and collection of taxes.

Williams contends the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, as construed by the U.S. Supreme Court, "forbids the state to use its governmental powers to bar children from public schools solely on racial grounds."

For all these reasons, Williams argued that the mandamus petition should be denied.

The attorney general earlier had asked for the mandamus order to compel the comptroller to pay out funds under the tuition grant law.

'Warmed up after I prayed...'

NEWPORT NEWS, Va.—"The Governor was a little cool to me at first, but he warmed up after I prayed. We shook hands and he thanked me for coming . . ."

With these words, the Rev. John F. Williams, pastor of First Baptist Church here, described his recent visit with Gov. J. Lindsay Almond to discuss the state's perplexing school segregation problem.

The minister, who took the bulls by the horn by going directly to the Chief Executive of the State, is pastor of this city's largest colored church.

THE 4,200 members of his church are accustomed to his straight-forward approach to problems and his tendency to be outspoken on controversial issues.

The Rev. Mr. Williams suggested that the governor appoint a bi-racial educational commission "so we can sit down and discuss the problems."

He also urged the appointment of colored citizens to the State board of education and the State parole, health and welfare boards.

"I told him that we (colored Virginians) don't feel we have any representation. I suggested that he name some colored people to these boards so we can feel that we belong — the Commonwealth of Virginia — and can make some contribution to it," Rev. Williams said.

ABOUT Gov. Almond's comments, the minister said:

"I don't think it would be fair for me to divulge what he said to me. But I can say that I was warmly received.

"We talked for about 24 minutes. I mentioned how fair he had been as a judge in Hustings Court and said I was sure that he understood the gravity of the present situation.

"I told him that I am president of the Interdenominational Ministers Alliance of Newport News, state president of the Baptist Training Union, and vice president of the Interracial Ministers Conference here, and that I was not speaking for these organizations, but for myself."

PASTOR OF First Baptist Church here for 10 years, the Rev. Mr. Williams was born in Pittsfield, Mass., but grew up in Philadelphia.

He attended Virginia Union University, and Temple University and studied for two summers at the Virginia Union School of Religion.

A fearless champion of unpopular causes, the Rev. Mr. Williams was central figure in a controversy here several years ago.

At that time he was president of the local NAACP Branch, which met monthly at his church. He objected to the second marriage of Walter White, then NAACP executive secretary.

Members of the chapter wanted to send Mr. White a congratulatory letter, but Rev. Williams refused to sign the letter.

"They (local NAACP members) got mad at me when I said Mr. White shouldn't have married out of the race. I thought it was a slap in the face for all colored women, and said so. I was in the dog house for quite a few years."

HE HAS not held NAACP office since then but has maintained his membership in the organization and has worked tirelessly to attain its objectives of first-class citizenship.

The Rev. Mr. Williams feels confident that his visit with Gov. Almond will produce results.

"He (Almond) said something very encouraging to me," the minister confided.

THE CLERGYMAN said his conference with Gov. Almond was prompted by the Governor's refusal to meet with colored organizations.

"The lines of communication were down and I just felt that something should be done. I talked with colored leaders here and we decided not to send a delegation to see the governor as this might be interpreted in some quarters as an attempt to bring pressure to bear."

The Rev. Mr. Williams is highly regarded in his community. Even those who oppose his direct approach, say he is sincere, competent and courageous.

He explains his frankness bluntly by saying: "I speak what I believe."

Integration Fight In Virginia Moves Toward Showdown

Post Herald P3

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of three on-the-spot reports backgrounding the importance of the school integration struggle in Virginia.

BY JERRY BENNETT
For The Post-Herald

RICHMOND, Va. — One of the most important rounds in the South's fight against desegregating its public schools is moving swiftly to a climax in Virginia.

Federal court orders to mix white and Negro pupils this year in Arlington, Charlottesville, Norfolk and Newport News have spotlighted the historic state as the key integration trouble spot of 1958.

With the new school term opening nearly in September, the tense controversy has produced a seemingly self-perpetuating series of legal moves as integrationists and segregationists seek victory for their views in the state and federal courts.

On the outcome of these manuevers rests not only the continuation or the end of Virginia's separation of the races in public schools, but also:

—The future of the state's entire public education system.

—The future pattern of opposition to integration in many other states in the Deep South.

For the key issue in the Virginia struggle is the legal strategy known as "massive resistance." This is a series of state laws designed to prevent the implementation of the 1954 U. S. Supreme Court ruling that racial segregation in public schools is unconstitutional.

Some Southern states already have adopted similar laws. Others are awaiting the outcome of the Virginia fight before acting.

Basically, this is how the Virginia law works:

Gov. J. Lindsay Almond is required to close any public school where white and Negro children are enrolled together. Following this action, the governor can try to reopen the school on a segregation basis.

If he fails to exclude Negro pupils, the governor may return the school to local community control if he is petitioned to do so by the school board and city council.

However, state funds will be automatically cut off to the school and all others in its class, either elementary or secondary, if the community decides to integrate. The state funds would then be given to pupils as grants-in-aid so they could attend private schools.

It is believed highly unlikely that Gov. Almond ever would return a school to a community where there was strong integration sentiment.

For this reason, some experts think that the "massive resistance" laws eventually spell the end to public education in Virginia.

Actively backing the laws are Virginia's segregationists whose principal organization is The Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties.

Opposing them are Virginia representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and some pro-public school groups. The latter claim to be neither segregationists nor integrationist. Spokesmen say that their only goal is to preserve the state's public education system.

The biggest challenge to "massive resistance" has come from Federal District Court judges who have ordered schools in Charlottesville, Norfolk, Newport News and Arlington not to refuse admission to more than 200 Negro pupils in September because of their race or color.

Negro pupils also have applied to attend white schools in Richmond, Warren County, and Alexandria. But so far, their applications have not been backed up by court action.

The Defenders and the NAACP are equally vocal about the righteousness of their campaigns. Each group is convinced that it will win the ultimate victory.

Robert R. Harmon, an official of the Charlottesville branch of the Defenders, declares, "Where can the Supreme Court say that the laws of any sovereign state are not valid? If it comes to the point where we have to choose between integration and closing the public schools, I think that we'll take the second choice and use private schools instead."

Typical of the opposing philosophy is the opinion of Victor J. Ashe, chief counsel for the Norfolk branch of the NAACP. He declares:

"The massive resistance laws are going to be made ineffective eventually by judges not giving the segregationists the opportunity to keep schools segregated while they appeal their cases to the courts, and by proper leadership in Virginia coming forth to encourage upholding the law of the land." He adds, "When these laws start to fall, they're going to fall fast."

Officials of the U.S. Justice Department refuse to make any public comment whatsoever on the Virginia school situation.

Virginia observers believe that there is little chance of schools being integrated, or closed, in Newport News this September. Since this coastal city was ordered to desegregate, it has combined with the city of Warwick to form a completely new community.

Segregationists say that the federal order does not apply to the new school board. The NAACP disagrees. A decision is expected soon.

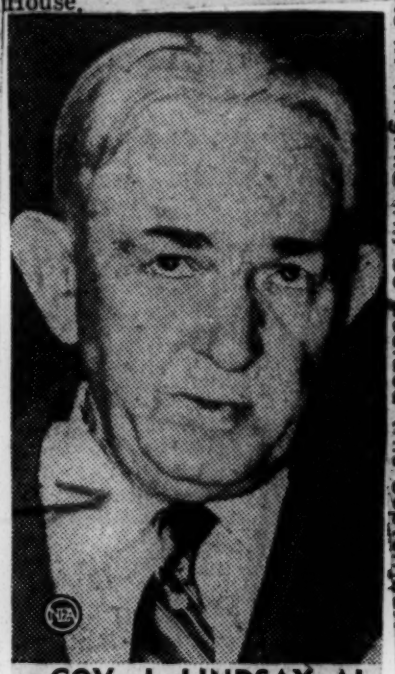
In Norfolk and Charlottesville there are almost daily developments as events move to a showdown.

Some officials of The Defenders foresee delays in these cities, too. They point out that local school boards there would be operating illegally if they assigned either Negro or white pupils to specific schools. This is due, they explain, to another law in the "massive resistance" series that empowers only a three-man State Pupil Placement Board to assign children to specific schools.

Consequently, The Defenders say, the Charlottesville and Norfolk boards might find themselves caught between a federal court telling them not to refuse to integrate and a state court warning them they lack the power to do anything about pupil placement.

It is expected that the local board would appeal its case if such a situation occurred. Integration might be delayed for a year while the appeal was being ironed out in court.

It is possible, however, for the federal judges in the Norfolk and Charlottesville cases to assign Negro pupils to specific white schools. That is what has happened in Arlington, just across the Potomac from the imposing marble building of the Supreme Court and the classic colonial grandeur of the White House.



GOV. J. LINDSAY ALMOND — He is charged with carrying out Virginia's "massive resistance" laws.

INTEGRATION HAS PROCEEDED smoothly in some schools of some southern cities. The course of events in Virginia will be decided this September.

Virginia Must Decide By Thursday To Mix Its Schools Or Close Them

RICHMOND, Va. (AP)—Virginia arrives next week at the time of decision when it must obey federal court decrees and integrate some of its public schools — or close them.

Barring unforeseen delays, the choice will be made first on Thursday, when schools open in Arlington, a northern Virginia suburb of Washington.

On Sept. 8, the same choice will have to be made in Norfolk. On Sept. 15 it must be made in Charlottesville. Both cities, like Arlington, are under the guns of federal judges to end school segregation this fall.

There is no question what the choice will be, should the state find it impossible any longer to forestall the enrollment of even one Negro child in even one white school.

The white school in which a Negro is enrolled will close. State law says it must.

Should it become apparent beyond that there is no way to keep the Negro out, the school will never open.

School closure is the final alternative Virginia has left for itself in its long, complex, confusing legal war to avoid compliance with the 1954 U.S. Supreme Court desegregation decision.

After closure — if and when it comes—then what?

State law provides that Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. must first attempt to reorganize a closed school so that it may be reopened on a segregated basis.

There will be efforts to persuade Negro students to withdraw. If such persuasion fails, the grades in which they are enrolled may simply be eliminated, the pupils reassigned to other segregated schools, and the affected school reopened on a segregated basis.

Should all expedients fail, the school will remain closed. State money for its operation will be cut off from the locality. State-financed tuition grants will become available to pupils for private school education.

Then, presumably, white citizen groups with loosely knit plans for the use of homes, churches and business establishments for private schools will be galvanized into action.

U. S. Dist. Judge Albert Bryan last year directed the Arlington School Board to admit seven Negroes to white schools—and named the students. Five of the seven still intend to enter white schools next Thursday.

In Norfolk, the City School Board told U. S. Dist. Judge Walter E. Hoffman Friday it is prepared to enroll 17 Negroes in white schools this fall under a local pupil assignment plan. At the same time the board asked Hoffman to permit a delay in such enrollment until September, 1959, to prepare Norfolk citizens for such "profound changes."

Hoffman indicated he would reject the plea for delay unless the U. S. Supreme Court, after arguments starting Sept. 11, gives Little Rock, Ark., a 2½-year delay in the integration of Little Rock Central High School.

Charlottesville also has a local assignment plan and is under a virtual ultimatum from U. S. Dist. Judge John Paul to assign some Negroes to its white schools, but as yet has made no assignments.

The Charlottesville School Board earlier this week postponed the opening of its schools from Sept. 2 to Sept. 15 while it sudies its position.

Both Norfolk and Charlottesville have been enjoined by state courts from assigning any pupils at all to any schools, white or Negro. The injunctions were granted on grounds state law vests all authority for pupil assignment anywhere in the state in a three-member state pupil placement board.

No action against the two school boards for violation of the injunctions is anticipated until both act formally to assign Negroes to white schools.

Virginia's Laws Keep Its Schools White

L. M. Wright Jr. was born and educated in the South. He also has studied race relations under a Nieman fellowship at Harvard. Now a member of the Charlotte (N.C.) Observer staff, he is touring the racially troubled areas of Virginia where school integration is coming to a showdown. This is the first of several stories.

By L. M. WRIGHT

Miami Herald — Chicago News Wire

RICHMOND, Va. — The Commonwealth of Virginia will share the integration spotlight with Little Rock when a new public school term opens.

In Virginia, for the first time, the Deep South strategy of closing schools to prevent even token integration will be put to a major test.

Three urban areas — Norfolk, Charlottesville and Arlington County — expect some schools to be closed.

The national capital, just across the Potomac from Arlington, and the rest of the nation will be watching to see how it works.

How did it come about?

In the four years since the school desegregation ruling by the U.S Supreme Court, Virginia's conservative political leaders, backed by a working majority of the voters, have deliberately and successfully evaded every effort of federal courts to command compliance.

Few persons in Virginia expect the state-federal clash to involve anything quite so dramatic or so drastic as the use of federal troops. The current inclination of the Eisenhower administration to try to find other methods of dealing with resistance tends to back this view.

Moving under the heavy, conservative hand of U.S. Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D.), head of a political machine that has ruled this state for 30 years, Virginia's legislators have carefully built a complex maze of laws that they hope will prevent any integration in schools.

Virginia's anti-integration plan is called "massive resistance." In its simplest form, it means that no Negro child shall attend school with a white child.

As the state waits to see what the final form of the federal court orders will be, the massive resistance laws are ready for use. Step-by-step, here is what will happen once a federal court enters the final order:

1—By state law, any school that is integrated is automatically closed and turned over to the governor.

The governor has already said that a final order from a federal court would be sufficient reason to close a school.

Thus it will not be necessary for a Negro student to seek to enroll on opening day, a fact that may reduce the chance of violence.

2—The governor, in control of a closed school, must try to reorganize it on a segregated basis. If he is unable to, he may (but is not required to) return the school to local officials if they ask for it.

Gov. J. Lindsay Almond, however, has no intention of giving up control of a school if he knows in advance it will be integrated by local officials.

3—If, for whatever reason, a school does become integrated, state financial aid, which in some areas is nearly half the local school budget, would be cut off.

To back this "defense in depth" concept, the legislature took the power of assigning pupils from local school boards and placed it in the hands of a segregationist board whose three members are appointed by the governor.

A final point: If schools do close, students left without a school would be eligible for tuition grants — amounts of money equal to the cost of educating the child.

This money would aid in the operation of private schools, several of which have been widely discussed here, but none of which exist.

Norfolk Citizens To Press For Desegregation

NORFOLK, Va. (ANP)—Dr. Edward J. Odom, NAACP Church secretary, told an audience here Saturday "you stand in the middle of history" because of the community's court battles in support of desegregated schools. He warned, however:

"Negroes have a moral obligation" in the current struggle for civil rights and desegregated schools. "If we get freedom without doing anything," he said, "we will be the first people ever to do that."

Dr. Odom was the main speaker at a testimonial dinner in honor of 17 Negro children assigned to six former all-white schools in Norfolk which were promptly closed under Virginia's massive resistance to school desegregation. The affair held in the gymnasium of Norfolk Division of Virginia State College was sponsored by the Citizens Committee of Norfolk. More than 500 people heard Dr. Odom.

Virginia Colored Students Say They Will Boycott Pupil Placement Board Exams But Submit To Board Queries

ARLINGTON, Va. — (NNPA) — Colored students, who have applied for admission to white public schools in Arlington county, Monday announced that they would boycott the interviews requested by the Virginia Pupil Placement board but would submit to any reasonable proceedings that the local school board may prescribe.

Fail To Appear

Frank D. Reeves, attorney for the 31 applicants, advised Arlington school authorities and the Virginia Pupil Placement board that the students would not appear for interviews the state agency proposed to give Tuesday and Wednesday.

His letter to the school board added, however, that the students are "willing to submit to such reasonable proceedings as you may prescribe and administer."

The action of the pupils and their attorney followed a ruling earlier Monday by Federal Judge John Paul in Harrisonburg, Va., that colored pupils in Charlottesville, Va., must submit to school board tests there before they can claim that the tests are discriminatory.

If the Arlington school board leaves the screening of students in the hands of the Virginia Pupil Placement board, Mr. Reeves said, the next logical step would be for the children and their parents to go back to the Federal District Court at Alexandria, Va., and ask that the students be ordered admitted to the schools of their choice.

Mr. Reeves said the decision to submit to what he called any "reasonable" program administered by the Arlington school board was based on the ruling of Judge Paul in the Charlottesville case.

Seven To Be Admitted

In a ruling handed down by Federal District Judge Albert V. Bryan in Alexandria last September 11, seven colored children were ordered admitted to four white schools in Arlington.

Judge Bryan said he could not require the children to submit to the Virginia Pupil Placement act because such submission "would amount almost to assent to racially segregated schools."

Since Judge Bryan's ruling, 27 other colored children have applied for admission to white schools in Arlington county. Of the 34 children seeking admission, one has moved from Arlington, another has decided to continue at a private school, and the third was graduated in June from a private school.

Five of the students ordered admitted to white schools by Judge Bryan are among the 31 applicants for enrollment in white schools this fall.

The placement law was amended last winter to meet some objections raised by federal courts in adverse rulings.

Mr. Reeves said he did not see any fundamental difference between the amended law and the old on. He said he was relying on Judge Bryan's original decree.

In his letter to the school board, Mr. Reeves asked for a reply within five days on which action is to be taken on the applications.

White Mother Acts

The applicants, in keeping with the petition of 50 Negroes for admission to white schools there. Norfolk school authorities conceded at the hearing that four of the Negroes met all the requirements for a transfer to white schools and would have been admitted if they were white.

Say It Wouldn't Be Best

The Norfolk school officials testified, however, that the admission of the four to white schools would aggravate racial tensions already existing and would not be in the negroes' best interests.

The 50 negroes' applications were rejected by the school board earlier this week.

Norfolk, Charlottesville, and Arlington are under Federal District Court orders to desegregate their schools, starting with the term beginning next month. Virginia law calls for the closing of any school in which the races are mixed.

'No Enforced Integration,' Almond Says

Troops Will Patrol Empty Schoolhouses

Richmond, Va., Aug. 21 (AP)—Governor J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., said Thursday that if federal troops are sent into Virginia to enforce public-school desegregation, "They will patrol empty schoolhouses."

"There will be no enforced integration in Virginia," Almond said.

He called on the people of Virginia to stand with him and the state's General Assembly in efforts to maintain the state's traditional segregated-school system.

Almond's news-conference remarks came in response to newsmen's questions for comment on President Eisenhower's statement Wednesday that it was the "solemn duty" of all Americans to comply with Federal Court school-desegregation orders.

'This Is Not . . . Defiance'

Almond said, "This is not a matter of defiance; I have no spirit of defiance."

The obligation to uphold the United States Constitution, he said, "is of just as much concern of the Governor of a sovereign state as it is to the President.

"It is my deep conviction that the (Supreme Court's) decision is in violation of the Constitution. My obligation is just as strong as it ever was. My obligation to uphold law and order is a matter on my conscience, a matter I will diligently observe."

Almond's comments came as a Federal District Court hearing was in progress at Norfolk on

Parley Held On Norfolk's School Crisis

RICHMOND, Dec. 11 (AP)—A Norfolk delegation conferred with Gov. J. Lindsay Almond for approximately an hour today on that City's school situation.

Mayor W. Fred Duckworth, who requested the conference, brushed aside reporters' questions after emerging from the Governor's office and said any statement would have to come from Almond.

Later, an aide to the Governor told newsmen the Governor had no statement to make. He added Almond and the Norfolk group "just reviewed the situation" and quoted the Governor as saying no conclusions were reached.

Attorney General A. S. Harrison participated in the conference. Others in the Norfolk delegation were Councilman Lewis L. Layton and W. L. Prieur Jr., clerk of the Corporation and Law and Chancery courts.

In a related development, a Norfolk Negro leader said

TROOPS WOULD PATROL EMPTY SCHOOLHOUSES, VOWS, ALMOND

RICHMOND, Va. (UPI)—Gov. J. Lindsay Almond said Thursday that if troops are sent to enforce integration in Virginia, they will patrol empty schoolhouses.

Almond, commenting on President Eisenhower's indication Wednesday that he might again order troops to carry out federal court integration rulings as was done at Little Rock, reiterated his belief that the situation in Virginia "is more acute than in some other areas" faced with integration crises.

He told his news conference the state's stand against integration is "not a matter of defiance."

"I have no spirit of defiance," he said. "The obligation to uphold the Constitution is just as much the concern of a governor of a sovereign state as it is of the President.

"My deep conviction," he added, "is that the Supreme Court's desegregation decision is in violation of the Constitution."

His reference to troops patrolling empty schoolhouses was to a law which automatically would close any public school where federal troops are sent to enforce integration, whether or not any integration has yet taken place.

Layton's suggestion that the 17 Negro students admitted to white schools withdraw from the schools would be ignored.

J. Hugo Madison, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said Layton's appeal "will necessarily have to fall on deaf ears." Layton made his suggestion during a Council meeting earlier this week.

Almond shut down Norfolk's white high schools after the Negroes were enrolled. This locked out 10,000 white students. The City Council has been dropping hints that it would close the Negro schools in retaliation unless the 17 Negro students withdraw their applications for entry into the white schools.

"Mr. Layton and members of council who apparently feel so deeply about the closing of the schools should do more than try to persuade or pressure the 17 children to give up their constitutional rights," Madison said.

"Mr. Layton's words will necessarily have to fall on deaf ears, because of the past actions and attitudes of the powers that be in this City."

Official Denies Norfolk Negro School Threat

Says He Asked Delay on Suits So White Classes Could Reopen

NORFOLK, Va., Dec. 10 (AP)—City Councilman L. L. Layton said today no ultimatum was intended in his request that 17 Negro applicants for white schools withdraw their applications.

"I am definitely interested in opening closed schools, not in closing additional schools," Layton said. His comment came in reply to speculation that his statement at yesterday's city council meeting implied that if the Negroes do not withdraw their applications, the council may cut off funds for some Negro schools.

At yesterday's council meeting Layton appealed to the 17 Negroes "to return to your previous schools until June, until all Federal and State court decisions and appeals have been completely settled . . . Unless arrangements can be made by approximately the 15th of this month to open temporarily the presently closed schools by the first of 1959, then our hopes for understanding, like many of the candles of our Christmas season, will be dimmed by despair and some may be extinguished for all time."

Layton said today he thought Dec. 15 would be the latest date on which the school board could make all necessary arrangements for reopening the closed schools.

The school board enrolled the 17 Negroes in six white secondary schools in September in compliance with a Federal court desegregation order. The State then closed the schools, which were attended by 10,000 pupils.

Parents of several of the children were asked by a reporter today if they wished to comment on Layton's request. Three parents said they will not withdraw. Six declined comment.

The Rev. Edward Martin, rector of the Negro Grace Episcopal Church, said, "It is totally unthinkable on my part that any good could be done by asking the 17 Negro students to withdraw. One cannot help but interpret the statement as an ulimatum."

Gov. J. Lindsay Almond has disavowed any intent to close Negro schools in retaliation for the closing of white schools.

But the Norfolk City Council on Nov. 24 inserted a provision in the school budget which specifically reserved the right to "change or cancel the unexpended portion" of school funds at any time, and to prohibit any expenditure the Council may wish to prohibit.

The Council's action was interpreted as a step toward the closing of the city's Negro secondary schools attended by some 4500 pupils.

Makeshift Schools Get Virginia Accreditation

RICHMOND, Dec. 12 (AP).—The State Board of Education has accredited makeshift private high schools in Norfolk and Warren County.

Accreditation of the private facilities, set up to accommodate pupils whose public schools were closed to avoid integration, is on an emergency basis for the current school year.

The board said the private high school at Front Royal, the Tidewater Academy in Norfolk and a third school in Charlottesville will be eligible to receive State tuition grants —if and when the grants are declared valid by the courts. The Charlottesville school is the Robert E. Lee Elementary School operated by the Charlottesville Education Foundation.

Accreditation had been requested for the Norfolk and Warren County schools. Leaders of temporary, private schools in Charlottesville apparently will not seek State accreditation. Presumably they do not wish to link their operations too closely to the State and thereby lead to a desegregation case.

Dr. Davis Y. Paschall, State superintendent of public instruction, said accreditation of the schools in Norfolk and Warren County, with an approximate enrollment of 1,000 students, means credits of graduating students will be recognized on transcripts sent to colleges.

Dr. Paschall said approval of the schools under the board's tuition grant regulations means teachers working for the private groups can participate in the Virginia supplemental retirement system.

penses for November, to a previous bill for $460,000 that is now being considered by State officials.

School Supt. J. J. Brewbaker observed that the State is deferring action on payment of the original bill pending court rulings on the validity of the anti-integration laws under which the six white secondary schools were closed.

The law under which the schools were closed says the State assumes the contractual obligations of the school board for any school shut down under its terms. On advice of the city attorney, the school board has interpreted this to mean the State is responsible for the salaries of all personnel employed at the schools.

In other action the school board agreed to a policy, suggested by city council, banning the use of public schools for meetings dealing with the topic of segregation.

NORFOLK BILL HITS $693,000

NORFOLK, Va., Dec. 12 (AP).—The Norfolk School Board's bill to the State for the costs of operating six schools closed under Virginia's anti-integration laws has now reached $693,000.

Prespects for collecting are uncertain, as even the school board noted yesterday. It tacked a new bill for $233,000, covering salaries and other ex-

Mixed schools no problem

WHEELING, W. Va. — Governor Cecil H. Underwood of West Virginia declared last week that the integration of pupils in the state's public schools is no problem, but that if segregationists from out of the State attempt to make it one, then the state and Federal Government will move to block the effort.

The Governor said that he did not have a full report on the bombing of the 17-room Osage Elementary - Junior High School, but was confident that the bombing had nothing to do with West Virginia segregation.

"Preliminary reports by law officers give no indication that the bombing was caused by racial feeling," he declared.

NAACP head accuses college president

BY BAKER MORTON
AFRO Staff Correspondent

GREENSBORO, N.C. — "Dr Gibbs told me I was a controversial figure because of my affiliation with the NAACP and that my presence would endanger the jobs of 400 other persons employed at A. and T. College.

"My dismissal came about on these grounds and not because of improper procedures relative to my appointment."

The speaker was Dr. Edwin E. Edmunds, president of the Greensboro chapter of the NAACP, who was dismissed Wednesday as director of the Wesley Foundation at A. and T. College.

DR. EDMUNDS, a sociology professor at Bennett College here, told the AFRO Friday:

"I was told by President Warmoth Gibbs of A. and T. College that my work was appreciated and admired, but my presence at Wesley Foundation would endanger appropriations to A. and T. College."

Dr. Gibbs told the AFRO he requested Dr. Edmunds' dismissal because "we didn't get an application or any references or qualifications of his work with religious groups.

"At Bennett College, Dr. Edmunds is not doing religious work with students. The fact that he is affiliated with the NAACP had nothing to do with my requesting his dismissal."

THE A. AND T. COLLEGE president sent the request for dismissal to the Rev. W. T. Brown, district superintendent of the Methodist Church.

The Wesley Foundation is a Methodist organization which functions off campus at a number of non-religious affiliated North Carolina colleges. It has no connection with the colleges.

The foundation invites Methodist students to participate in worship services and social activity at places off the campus.

Dr. Edmunds said he was appointed to the Wesley Foundation post last September upon the recommendation of Bishop Edgar A. Love of the Methodist Church.

IN BALTIMORE, Bishop Love told the AFRO that he did not know the facts surrounding the dismissal action and could not make a statement.

He said he received a letter from the district superintendent to the effect that Dr. Edmunds had been dismissed and that the Rev. Mr. Brown had assumed temporary directorship of Wesley Foundation until a permanent replacement was appointed.

"The Methodist Church administration gave no reason for the dismissal in the letter," Bishop Love stated, adding:

"DR. EDMUNDS is an ordained Methodist minister. I don't know why the administration wanted him relieved.

"All appointments made must be acceptable to the administration and many things could have been involved in the dismissal."

Asked to comment on why President Gibbs took the action, Bishop Love stated:

"I have known Mr. Gibbs for a number of years. I presume he was directed to do so by subordinates. A president does not always take direct action himself."

The prelate declared that minor jealousies and "many other factors" could have brought about the action, adding:

"It could have been precipitated by someone else, I don't know. It is true that Dr. Edmunds is connected with the NAACP.

DR. EDMUNDS ASSERTED that Bishop Love has questioned his dismissal. He said he received no salary from the state, his students did not meet on the A. and T. College campus and the students attended the foundation voluntarily.

"My activity in no way could have endangered the school budget since I was paid by the Methodist Church and not A. and T. College," Dr. Edmunds declared.

He said Dr. Gibbs admitted when they talked that Dr. Edmunds was dismissed because of his NAACP activity alone.

The Bennett College professor also stated that Dr. Gibbs admitted and named several other groups who were appointed to posts at the school without "written references and qualifications."

DR. GIBBS admitted that he and Dr. Edmunds conferred following the dismissal action, but insisted that Dr. Edmunds was discharged because of certain procedures relative to his appointment that had not been followed.

The A. and T. College head told the AFRO that a school policy on leasing the college gymnasium accounted for his refusal last year to allow Dr. Martin L. King of Montgomery, Ala., to speak there when asked by the NAACP.

"There are 75 student organizations at A. and T. and their activity demands use of the college gymnasium most of the time. In addition, our policy is not to rent the gymnasium.

"If we break the regulations for one group we would have to break it for all groups," President Gibbs stated.

"As to the student petition to organize a college chapter of the NAACP at A. and T., it is currently pending action of the administrative and personnel departments.

"There is no regulation against students or teachers being in the NAACP and if all the student requirements are met, I am sure the proper officials will give the matter their unbiased consideration.

"I don't know who started the petition circulating," Mr. Gibbs stated when further questioned about the bill.

"I DIDN'T appoint Dr. Edmunds so I didn't dismiss him," he concluded.

Dr. Edmunds declared that he was told by the Rev. Mr. Brown that the A. and T. College president had requested his dismissal.

He indicated that pressure had been placed upon Dr. Gibbs for his ouster.

"Mr. Gibbs told me he received two anonymous phone calls about my working with the Wesley Foundation.

"He said he hadn't received any trouble, but was anticipating the possibility of it with my presence at the foundation."

"In regard to the students circulating a petition for an NAACP chapter on the campus, they were told to be quiet about it because it would harm the school budget since A. and T. is a state-operated college."

The NAACP president said:

"If improper procedure was the cause of my dismissal from the foundation, then the Methodist Church and not A. and T. College would be responsible.

"Wesley Foundation is connected with the Methodist Church and not the college.

"The students at the college have circulated a petition seeking to establish an NAACP chapter at A. and T.

"The matter has been squashed and the students told not to press for a chapter because it would cause the state legislature to curtail the appropriations to the college."

Dr. Edmunds has been president of the NAACP for about a year.

For The Second Time

Veteran Teacher Again Retires From His Job

GREENSBORO, N. C. — An instructor at A. and T. College retired last week for a second time.

Joseph H. Meyers, 83, plumbing and heating instructor in the A. and T. College Technical Institute for the past 12 years, hung up his tools at the end of the past school year. He came out of retirement in April of 1946 to take the A. and T. post.

THE FORMER owner-operator of the Meyers Plumbing and Heating Company and working in the trade here for 20-odd years, Meyers entered teaching to fill, temporarily, the open position. He liked the work so well that he stayed on.

"I never realized before that teaching young people could be such a challenging experience and I have enjoyed every hour of it", he explains. He is also grateful to his students. "They have helped to make me a younger man", he declared.

WHILE WORKING at the plumbing trade, he helped to rewrite the Greensboro Plumbing Code in 1940, or there about.

A veteran of two wars, the Spanish-American engagement and World War I, he returned to the U. S. Army and served for a number of years following the latter engagement as aerial photographer, with flying status, at the Langley Air Field in Virginia.

HE MARRIED THE former Miss Eunice Ballard, a nurse, in 1921 and the couple took up residence here in that same year.

What are his plans? His immediate schedule calls for catching up on his reading and a few of his favorite TV shows and generally, taking it easy in the most comfortable chair at his Spring street residence. That appears to be only temporary for he gives the impression that he will somehow, somewhere, retire for a third time.

KING DISMISSED FROM POSITION

Alcorn Professor Cites NAACP Charge

ALCORN, Miss. (AP)—A Negro college professor whose pro-segregation newspaper articles nearly closed Alcorn A&M (Negro) college last year said Friday he has been dismissed as a sacrificial offering to the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

History Prof. Clennon King said in a statement: "No reasons are given because this dismissal had already been pronounced verbally one year ago when someone decided that I be made Mississippi's sacrificial offering to the NAACP. . . .

"This formal and open dismissal has been cowardly held in abeyance in order that those who are interested in what I stand for would forget why I am finally dismissed."

King said college president J. D. Boyd wrote him Thursday "to inform you that your contract will not be renewed at the end of the 1957-58 school term. You are free to leave the campus at any time you wish."

Last year, most of the 450 students of this small Claobirne county school boycotted classes in protest to a series of articles in which King criticized the NAACP.

The students returned to class after the college board warned they would be expelled if they continued to boycott class. King, who offered to resign at one time, did not resign and was not dismissed.

King's statement regarding his dismissal said his "stand has been for freedom. I stand for academic freedom. I stand for freedom of speech."

Alcorn ousts Clennon King

LORMAN, Miss. — Clennon King, professor of history at Alcorn A. and M. College, was advised by mail May 1 that his contract will not be renewed at the end of the 1957-58 school term.

The letter, signed by J. D. Boyd, president of the school, informed Mr. King that he is free to leave the campus at any time he wishes.

The notice apparently has upset Mr. King a great deal. One year ago he verbally attacked the NAACP and his students walked out of his class.

HE TOLD the AFRO:

"No reasons are given because this dismissal had already been pronounced one year ago when someone decided that I be made Mississippi's sacrificial offering to the NAACP.

"Is my destruction all the NAACP wants?

"This formal and open dismissal has been cowardly held in abeyance in order that those who are interested in what I stand for would forget why I am finally dismissed. I hope they have not forgotten. But if they have, I have not.

"My stand has been for freedom. I stand for academic freedom. I stand for freedom of speech. I stand for the freedom to criticize today's tin Gods. But most of all, I stand for freedom.

"IN THE two years I have been here in this state rich with history, I have tried to be a friend to Mississippi. Apparently Mississippi has rejected my friendship. What should I do?

"Should I go on begging for justice here at Alcorn, or should I fight back? Should I drop my head in shame and try beginning my life anew, or should I forget the unforgettable and retreat into false pretension?

"I can assure you that if neither you nor I have a good answer, God has one, and I shall seek it."

Negro Teacher Protests Firing

History Prof. Clennon King said in a statement: "No reasons are given because this dismissal had already been pronounced verbally one year ago when someone decided that I be made Mississippi's sacrificial offering to the NAACP.

PRO-SEGREGATION NEGRO PROFESSOR OUSTED BY COLLEGE

Alcorn, Miss., May 2 (AP)—Prof. Clennon King, controversial Negro history professor whose pro-segregation writings set off a student boycott which almost closed Alcorn A. & M. College for Negroes last year, said today he has been dismissed.

"My stand has been for freedom," King said in a statement. "I stand for academic freedom. I stand for freedom of speech."

He displayed a copy of a letter from J. D. Boyd, president of the land grant college, dated May 1 and saying: "This is to inform you that your contract will not be renewed at the end of the 1957-58 school term. You are free to leave the campus at any time you wish."

A majority of the estimated 450 students of Alcorn A. & M. boycotted classes early last year in protest against a series of newspaper articles by King critical of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People. King at times has advocated a "back to Africa" movement for Negroes.

Alcorn College Holds First Summer Session

More than 600 teachers registered for the first session of the summer school, June 9-July 11, 1958.

Having graduated one hundred of those who attended last summer during the commencement convocation the college enrollment was appreciably high.

The program of instruction is much improved this summer. President J. D. Boyd has secured the services of outstanding individuals as guest professors during the first session and many more will be added to the roster for the second session. During the first assembly, Dr. Jesse A. Morris, Director of the Summer School, announced the following guest members of the faculty: Mrs. Daniel Williams, Elementary School Supervisor, Vance County Schools, Henderson, N. C., professor of elementary education; Mr. N. R. Burger, Principal Royal Street High School, Hattiesburg, Miss., professor of school administration; Mr. Frank Purnell, Professional Football Player, Green Bay Packers, instructor in physical education; Miss Christine Freelix, Home Economics Teacher, Picayune, Miss., instructor in clothing and related arts; Mrs. Alpha Morris, Michigan State University, instructor in social studies; Dr. M. H. Boulware, Professor of Speech and Special Education, St. Augustine's College, Raleigh, N. C., professor of English and Speech; Dr. M. Davis, Professor of English, Virginia State College, Petersburg, Va., professor of English and Speech; Mrs. Patrica A. Hill, Michigan State University, East Lansing, Mich., instructor in physical science and coordinator of recreation.

The teachers seem to approach their several tasks with high seriousness. There will be outstanding individuals invited during the summer, and the experiences should be rich and inviting, cultural and entertaining, helpful and beneficial, to those who give themselves in the fullness of the developmented process achieved as we work and play to the degree in which we are capable.

Mississippi Plans Bond Sale Today

$5,700,000 Worth To Be Offered By State

JACKSON, Miss., July 22.—(UPI)—Mississippi offers for sale $5,700,000 worth of bonds Wednesday.

The State Bond Commission is to sell the bonds in the Governor's office at 10 a.m.

Funds from the bond sale are scheduled to enable the state to spend one million dollars on restoration of the old Capitol building prior to its conversion into a state museum.

Other funds are to be used to construct a $300,000 science library building and construct and equip a $700,000 library at Mississippi Southern College.

Plans also call for construction of a science library and a mechanical arts and gymnasium building at Alcorn A&M College for Negroes at a cost of $750,000; construction and equipping of a million-dollar Mississippi State University classroom building and additional classrooms and equipment costing $575,000 at Jackson State College for Negroes.

Repairs of a building at the State Mental Hospital at Whitfield, to cost $500,000, are also planned.

ALABAMA COLLEGES

School Accreditation Standards Lower In State, Meadows Savs

Alabama school accreditation standards generally are lower than requirements of the Southern regional accrediting agency on at least six different points, School Superintendent A. R. Meadows said yesterday.

Meadows said he had made the comparative evaluation with standards of the Southern Assn. of Secondary Schools and Colleges "to inform the public in the light of recent criticism of certain state systems."

The six points listed by Meadows were:

1. The association requires all teachers to have a degree. The state says a non-degree teacher may continue working if hired prior to 1943 when school was accredited.

2. Principals are required to have Masters degree with major part of graduation study in administration and supervision, under association rules. State requires only bachelor's degree.

3. Association calls for $1.50 per pupil up to 500 pupils and $1.25 per pupil for 501 to 1,000 enrollment in library standards. State library standards require minimum annual expenditure of $1.25 per pupil in average daily attendance.

4. Association sets minimum teacher's salary at $3,000 and an average salary of $3,400. State has no set minimum and no established average.

5. Association requires that principal receive highest salary in his school. State makes no such provision and according to Meadows there are some cases where he is not the highest paid.

6. Association requires that athletics and all other extracurricular activities, and all related funds, be controlled by the school administration. State has no such requirement.

Meadows explained that in some cases Alabama athletic facilities still are maintained and managed by private interests.

Audit Finds Fund Shortages In Negro College Operation

By BOB INGRAM

The Department of Examiners of Public Accounts released a blistering audit Friday on the fiscal operations of the student finance offocer at Alabama State College for Negroes in Montgomery.

The audit had two immediate results:

Demand was made of the Negro official, Franklin W. Taylor, for $504.65, which he promptly paid; and second, the job of Student finance officer was abolished at the insistence of the examiners.

In addition, an accompanying audit of the Alabama State College turned up another shortage in the amount of $688.50, this also charged against Taylor. Again demand for payment was made of Taylor which he paid.

Taylor was ordered to make the $504.65 refund after examiners discovered he had held checks in that amount at his office for such a length of time that they became worthless.

The $688.50 shortage was an amount collected by Taylor for student fees which was never deposited by the secretary-treasurer.

Commenting on the situation in the Student Finance Office, the examiners reported:

"During the course of the examination your examiners found in the office of the student financt officer letters, files memoranda and other data containing cash and cash items in the amount of $16,600.39.

"We also found in a vault in the same building in which the Student Finance Office is located, a cardboard box filled with letters, files, etc., containing cash and cash items in the amount of $5,167.71

"These amounts apparently represented remittances for fees and various charges which had been paid into the office, but which had not been receipted or depisited. According to the dates of some of the checks and money orders found, some of the remittances had been on hand as long as 12 years, some bearing dates 1945."

The examiners said when they questioned Taylor as to why he had held the checks so long he explained that "the affairs of his office had fallen into such a state of delinquency that he found it impossible to maintain his records on a current basis."

The audit noted that checks and money orders in the amount of $1,674.10 were returned by the bank as uncollectable, but that Taylor was held accountable only for those which had been designated by the bank as "stale checks."

(Banks, for the protection of their customers, refuse to make payment on checks which have been held beyond a given period of time, usually six months. If held beyond that period, it becomes a "stale check".)

At the outset of their report, the examiners admitted their examination of Taylor's records did not cover any given period of time "since the system of records as maintained was by its inadequacy such that an accurate survey of student fees and revenues was virtually impossible."

The examiners added that as their work progressed "it became evident that little or no control over student fees or receivables was possible under the system in use."

The examination was made by Clint L. Hall, A. W. Steineker Jr. and Richard E. Thompson of the Department of Examiners.

It was the same three examiners who discovered the $688.50 discrepancy in the college records. They said on Oct. 1, 1954, Taylor had given receipts to students for various fees and charges in the amount of $688.50 but that this money was never delivered on to the secretary-treasurer.

Also audited was the John N. Brokn Courts, Inc., an apartment housing project operated by the college. Two strong recommendations were carried in this report, one a stern reminder that "absolutely no tennants be allowed" to occupy the apartments unless all rents due are paid in full and in advance.

The examiners added a warning that if any losses resulted to uncollectible rent accounts charges against the officials "should and will be set up."

Negro College Abolishes Finance Post Under Fire

MONTGOMERY, Sept. 21 (UPI) — Officials at Alabama State College for Negroes here have confirmed that the job of student finance officer has been abolished because of a blistering audit released Friday by the State Department of Examiners of Public Accounts.

Release of the audit also brought about a demand that the former Negro official, Franklin W. Taylor, pay $504.65. This was paid immediately, a spokesman said.

In addition, an accompanying audit of Alabama State College turned up another shortage in the amount of $688.50, and this also was charged against Taylor. Again demand for payment was made of Taylor, and he paid, the spokesman added.

Taylor was ordered to make the $504.65 refund after examiners discovered he had held checks in that amount at his office for such a length of time they became worthless. The $688.50 sum was collected by Taylor for student fees which the examiners said never was deposited.

The examiners reported some of the checks and money orders held by Taylor had been on hand as long as 12 years, some bearing a 1945 date.

Alabama State College Observes Founder's Day

Montgomery, Ala.
Jan 29-58

At 4 o'clock this Sunday afternoon at the arena-auditorium, Montgomery and Alabama State College will pay tribute to the memory of the late William Burns Paterson who was born at Tullibody, Scotland, on Feb. 9, 1849, and who served for 37 years, beginning in 1878 at Marion and extending until his death on March 11, 1915, as the president of the now Alabama State College.

There were preparatory student-assembly programs on Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday. at 2 o'clock this afternoon, wreaths will be placed upon the grave of William Burns Paterson by students from the Campus Laboratory School. The alumni representative for the program at 4 o'clock will be James H. Jones of the Class of 1912 who is a native of Clanton and is now retired after 28 years in the postal service at Columbus, Ohio.

This observance was begun back in 1901 as a surprise birthday program by a sixth grade class under the direction of the late Mary Frances Terrell who taught at the local school for 50 years. During the lifetime of Paterson, a similar program was staged on his birthday. After his death the program was expanded into a Founder's Day occasion in recognition of the very significant contributions which the late William Burns Patterson made to the development of the school during 37 years.

Some of the events in this early history of the local college which are recalled annually on this date of Feb. 9 include the following:

On Dec. 9, 1873, the-then State Board of Education of Alabama had authorized the establishment of a State Normal School and University at Martion in Perry County with reported operation in the year of 1874-75.

In 1878 (four years later) Patterson was elected as president and transferred his missionary endeavors from nearby Greensboro where he had previously begun Tullibody Academy in 1875.

In his first year (1879) at Marion, President Paterson secured a new site of 5.6 acres to which the buildings and fences were moved and on which a new building was subsequently completed in 1883 to bring the total value of buildings and grounds at Marion up to $8.000.

After two years, Paterson issued diplomas to the first class of five graduates in 1880 . . . one of whom had a first teaching appointment at Pike Road in Montgomery County.

In his fourth year (1881-1882) at Marion, President Paterson graduated his second "University" class, of which John William Beverly was a member and was also chosen as the first president of the Alabama State Teachers Assn. . . . which will stage its Diamond Jubilee convention here at Alabama State College on Wednesday - Thursday - Friday, March 26-27-28, 1958.

For his ninth year at Marion (1887), President Paterson reported a total of 100 graduates (including eight from the "University Course") for the eight classes of 1880-1887.

In 1887, Alabama's state Legislature authorized the discontinuance of the State Normal School and University at Marion and the establishment of an Alabama Colored Peoples University at a "suitable location."

In the summer of 1887, Paterson held meetings at various churches in Montgomery and succeeded in securing pledges of $2,000 for the purchase of a site in Montgomery which was accepted by President Paterson and the board of directors.

The Alabama Colored Peoples University was opened on Oct. 3, 1887 . . . with the 358 pupils being registered in the basement of Dexter Avenue Baptist Church and classes conducted on Norton street in Beulah Baptist Church and an adjoining store building.

However, after five months, the Supreme Court of Alabama handed down a decision in February, 1888, that "public school funds" could not be used to support a "university." Paterson kept the doors open and made effective appeal which resulted in new state legislation in 1889 for the establishnet of The State Normal School for Colored Students.

On May 8, 1889, the board for The State Normal School for Colored Students formally accepted the donation of $3,000 in money and land and confirmed the location of the school on the campus site of 6½ acres located east of South Jackson between Tuscaloosa street and Thurman.

The first graduating class at Montgomery was in 1890 . . . with the baccalaureate service at First Baptist Church and with the commencement exercises at Old Ship AMEZ Church.

The original frame building was completed in 1890 but was lost by fire on Dec. 13, 1904, and was subsequently replaced by the present Tullibody Hall which was occupied in June, 1906.

In his annual report for 1905-06, President Paterson observed that "out of an original grant of $15,000 from the Legislature of 1888, the State of Alabama now had five small buildings and the new two-story Tullibody Hall as a plant valued at $45.000.

Webb Probes Shortage at State College

A shortage of $24,344 in accounts of the Georgia State College of Business Administration has been referred to Fulton County Sol. Gen. Paul Webb for presentation to a grand jury.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook in making the announcement, also said a bonding company had been called on to pay a shortage of $3,100 in the accounts of Prudence Lee, cashier at the Albany State College.

State Auditor B. F. Thrasher reported the shortage in the Georgia State College of Business Administration last month. The shortage there was charged to Wayman Welborn, manager of the University Center Credit Union and Mrs. Betty L. Hilton, bookkeeper at the college.

Bonding companies paid the shortages charged to Wellborn and Mrs Hilton.

Cook said he was making a further study of the Albany State College shortage on a technical point of law.

Refuses To Bow To Dixiecrats

COLUMBIA, S. C. — President Frank R. Veal of Allen university here, has completely cleared three of his leading professors of all charges of being "subversive."

The three men, all under sharp attack by Dixiecrat Gov. George Bell Timmerman, jr., are Dr. Forrest Oran Wiggins, Dr. Edwin D. Hoffman, and Dr. John Granville Rideout. The latter two are white.

Veal's clear cut vindication of the professors forms the major portion of a sort of "state of the university" article dealing also with "Greater Emphasis on Religion," "Community Cooperation," "Academic Improvements," and "Related Activities."

In the lengthy statement, dated March 4, 1958, and circulating privately among leading white and Negro South Carolinians, Veal states emphatically, "It is the judgment of the president that he cannot and does not, recommend the dismissal of the three gentlemen whoe presence is questioned, on the basis of evidence and the facts disclosed."

TO REELECT TRIO

Veal's unequivocal stand taken in the face of pressures of the segregationist government of South Carolina, is seen by observers here as a definite indication that the historic AME institution will reelect Professors Wiggins, Hoffman, and Rideout at the May meeting of trustees.

Such a course of action is extremely popular on the Allen campus, where integration-minded students already are seeking entry into the all-white University of South Carolina, and also with A. M. E. churchmen and Allen alumni all over the country.

The professors, outspoken advocates of integration, have been under attack since early in 1957. On August 6, 1957, the Allen board of trustees unanimously voted to retain them. In September, the Dixiecrat State Board of Education, meeting secretly in Governor Timmerman's office, moved to deny Allen graduates certification to teach in the South Carolina public schools.

The board let it be known unofficially that certification would not be restored until Allen fired the professors. On January 10, 1958, the Allen university board of trustees met again to consider the problem. Dr. R. W. Mance, a leading trustee and national financial secretary of the A. M. E. church which is responsible for the support of Allen, charged "political blackmail" by the state, and urged the retention of the professors. President Veal refused to recommend their dismissal and they were retained.

CALLS FOR PROBE

On January 14, 1958, Governor Timmerman addressing the General Assembly at its opening session, asked for a special investigating committee to expose "communist activities." He specifically attacked three professors at Allen.

Negro groups such as the Columbia interdenominational ministerial alliance and the South Carolina progressive democrats strongly denounced the proposed investigation as an irresponsible attack on the freedom of the private Negro colleges.

The Negro pastors served notice on the state that "if such a law is passed, that the legality of the law will be tested in the highest courts of the Federal government."

When the state legislature was slow to do Timmerman's bidding, he sent a special message, this time attacking President J. A. Bacoat of Benedict college, and three white professors at this local Baptist college.

On April 10, a weary, broke, vote-hungry legislature voted hurriedly to establish an investigating committee with the so-called purpose, "to preserve the government of South Carolina." This is election year.

The Veal statement charges that agents of the Governor "first presented the issue" of the three professors in his office a year ago. Veal declared that the university proceeded to make a full investigation of their charges and fully satisfied itself that the charges were absolutely groundless.

'LOYAL AMERICANS'

Veal also states that the "Data sheets of the three gentlemen report each of them as a loyal American." He notes that the state police offered him no proof that his information absolving the professors was incorrect.

He states that he "received no evidence from records of the proper committees, sub-committees, or other groups of both the U. S. House of representatives and the U. S. Senate that any one of the gentlemen was, or is, a member of the Communist party, or a sympathizer of communism."

Veal further states that he received no proof from "any of several competent and efficient national agencies and investigators nor from 15 college presidents, or six educational agencies (not excluding some in South Carolina) supporting charges made against them."

Veal declares that the director of the State Law Enforcement Division informed the Allen Administration that it (SLED) "could find no proof to support the claims later made against the men." In the light of all this, Veal asserts, "It is neither Christian nor democratic to libel and discolor the reputation and lives of fellowmen in the absence of proof."

The Allen president concludes that "Based on the fact that those aiding in the study are considered the most authoritative and resourceful on the subject, we think the issue has been thoroughly checked out and accurately presented. And we wish to emphasize that in no instance has either of the gentlemen been reported as being, or checked and found to be either a Communist in the past or present, or a sympathizer of communism."

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Three Allen University professors, notified last June that they would be dismissed at the close of the current college year, may appear before members of the trustee board on May 15.

Dr. Frank R. Veal, president of the university, told the AFRO that he would notify the three men of the meeting, and of their right to appear, if they wish.

The professors are: Drs. John G. Rideout, Edwin Hoffman, both white and Forrest O. Wiggins.

THEY HAVE been targets of Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr., who pinned communistic activity charges on them.

Dr. Veal's release of the trio, however, he said, has no bearing on the Timmerman charges.

The May 15 possible hearing, Dr. Veal said, is in accordance with academic procedures and fair and honest treatment.

White Profs Out At Both Allen, Benedict

New "Pressure" On Colleges?

Special to Journal and Guide

COLUMBIA, S. C. — "Are South Carolina's colored church colleges bowing to state efforts to control them?"

That question is being raised time and time again here as both Allen university, the AME college here, and Benedict, the Baptist institution, put skids under members of their respective staffs said to be "unacceptable" to the state.

TWO WEEKS AGO, Allen's president, Dr. Frank R. Veal issued ouster notices to three professors, two of them white, who had been under fire from the state. Last week, Benedict's president, Dr. J. A. Bacoats, issued ouster notices to three white members of the Benedict staff.

A communication from the office of the Benedict president Friday, May 2 to the three white members of the Benedict staff said that the three — including a woman — would have to resign by Tuesday, May 6 or be fired the next day. This communication came shortly after a meeting of the school's trustee board and indications are that the decision was that of the board's executive committee.

BOTH THE Allen university and the Benedict college actions are viewed as "turnabouts" from the actions taken by the presidents of the respective institutions earlier this year.

In February after being publicly smeared and labeled "Reds" by South Carolina's Gov. George Bell Timmerman, Presidents Veal and Bacoats issued statements denying all allegations of "Red" affiliations. They also made lofty statements about academic freedom, respect for teachers' rights, etc.

UNTIL APRIL 22, when President Veal asked the three embattled professors at Allen university to give up their campus - sponsored residences prior to leaving employ of the school, all seemed well in Education Square here

The close proximity of the Allen and Benedict ouster actions gives credence to resounding beliefs here that "pressure" is again being foisted upon the church colleges.

ONE OF THE ousted teachers at Benedict, Dr. Lewis Smith, professor of English, told the Journal and Guide: "The real reason we (the three white teachers) are being ousted in such undue haste —nearly a month before the end of the semester — is plain enough. The administration, apparently under pressure from the executive committee; wants to appease the segregationist officials of the state"

"Get us out of the way," Dr. Smith added, "and the immediate threat the state holds over Benedict of loss of certification and of a legislative investigation, vanishes."

ALSO FACING ouster at Benedict in addition to Dr. Smith and the woman professor is Dr. J. Spencer Kennard, an aging former Baptist minister, who has been on the Benedict staff for six years.

The Benedict trio are protesting the administration's action to the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and the American Association of University Professors on the grounds that "the action of Dr. Bacoats is a gross violation of teachers rights and of academic freedom."

The staff members at Allen facing ouster and whose protection by the school's administrators at first cost loss of accreditation for teacher graduates are Drs. John Granville Rideout and Edwin D. Hoffman, both white, and Dr. Forest Oran Wiggins.

ALLEN UNIVERSITY

Allen University Will Not Yield To Timmerman Forces

COLUMBIA, S. C.— Dr. Lutrell Long of Atlanta, Ga., set the tempo Friday for a rousing Allen University Founder's Day program in which AME ministers and the president of the university vowed not to "surrender our rights as a private, Christian institution."

The theme of the program was "Don't Surrender," an obvious message to South Carolina Gov. George Bell Timmerman, Jr., and to the State Board of Education. On Sept. 9, the board apparently dropped Allen from the state approved list because the school refused to drop three professors the governor considered "leftwingers."

Dr. Frank R. Veal, president of the 88-year-old AME Church-supported university, said, "We are willing to be starved, and to suffer freezing weather before we surrender our rights as a private, Christian institution."

Dr. Long, pastor of Atlanta's Flipper Temple AME Church, declared that "the bitter cries of Tingle, Gov. Griffin of Georgia, Sen. Eastland of Mississippi and other antagonists of racial progress are but the agonizing cries and wild screams of those undergoing the labor pains in the birth of an integrated era."

He predicted the "day in which colored boys and girls will attend the University of South Carolina, and white boys and girls will be attending Allen University."

All of the charges initiated by Timmerman against the three Allen professors, two of whom are white, have been denied.

Veal's clear-cut vindication of the professors forms the major portion of a so-called "state of the university" article dealing also with "Greater Emphasis on Religion," "Community Cooperation," "Academic Improvements" and "Related Activities."

Allen Professors Asked To Vacate Apartments

COLUMBIA, S. C. — In a surprise move, Allen University sent registered letters, above the name of Joseph Johnson, business manager of the university, to Dr. Forrest Oran Wiggins and Dr. John Gamville Rideout on Saturday demanding "vacancy" of their apartments by May 26, three days prior to commencement.

Dr. Wiggins and Rideout are two of the three professors under attack by the S. C. State Board of Education. They reside in the Richard Allen Apartments, provided for teachers of Allen University. Dr. Edwin D. Hoffman, the other professor under attack, resides elsewhere.

President Frank R. Veal said in an interview at his home, "either the professors or me" must go. He said his actions are based on his executive authority and recommendations of the Dean of the school, Arthur D. Greene, and based on "full powers" extended him by the [illegible] of the school. This can be considered an initial move to dismiss the trio. He denied the move is anti-integration. Five white professors will be recommended for employment at Allen beginning with the 1958-59 term.

CLARIFIES POSITION

In clarification of a recent release from his office, he emphasized that he has never charged or based his actions now on "subversive activities" of the professors. President Veal further implied that the letters were sent with his knowledge and full approval stating that it was the responsibility of Mr. Johnson or business manager of the school to provide housing accommodations for the new professors.

In a prepared statement released by Dr. Rideout headed "Veal Issues Eviction Order to White Professor Housed on Allen Campus within three Days of Commencement", it read:

"He was the first teacher to put integration into practice in Allen's campus housing.

"His is the only white family ever to live on the campus of Allen University.

"He has lived here for four years and has proved that integrated housing can work in South Carolina.

"He was invited to live here with his family by Bishop (then President) Samuel Richard Higgins and by Bishop Frank Madison Reid, because they felt that Allen University could lead the way toward genuine-democratic race relations in the state.

CHILDREN IN SCHOOL

"Veal's notice to get out would put the Rideout family in the streets while the children are still in school and while Dr. Rideout is still on contract at the University as Professor of English and Chairman of the Division of Humanities.

"This action can not be interpreted as dismissal from his teaching position since Allen's Board of Trustees, which has the sole power to determine future contracts, is not scheduled to meet until after the eviction takes place.

"The Board will undoubtedly call Veal to account for this blatant betrayal of integration.

"Dr. Rideout is a member of the African Methodist Episcopal Church and a regular attendant at Bishop's Memorial Church here in Columbia.

"Veal held no prior conversation with Dr. Rideout on his plans to evict him, and the Rideout family was notified by a registered letter signed by the University's business manager.

"Dr. Rideout and two other integration-minded Allen professors have been under sharp atack by Gov. George Bell Timmerman, Jr., and Veal's order of eviction to the Rideout family is seen as outright capitulation to the Dixiecrats."

RHODES SCHOLAR

Dr. Rideout is a Rhodes scholar, a member of Phi Beta Kappa, and before coming to Allen in 1954 taught at some of America's leading universities.

Dr. Rideout has declared "President Veal's eviction order of a white family from integrated campus housing violates the very foundation on which African Methodism was established." He characterized Veal's action as "shockingly un-Christian" and expressed confidence that the injustice would be righted by the responsible leaders of Allen University and the African Methodist Episcopal Church.

WIGGINS ANNOUNCEMENT

Dr. Forrest Oran Wiggins' statement said:

"Dr. Rideout has occupied an apartment in the Richard Allen Apartments since it was first opened. I have been a resident here for three years. Why are these units--among the sixteen--so urgently needed at this time, and why did not other persons residing in the Richard Allen Apartments receive notices to vacate by May 27? Why did he ask these two members of the faculty to vacate the apartments and not persons who are not employed by the University?

"I am sure that Dr. Veal, whose reputation for sobriety, thrift, honesty, probity, integrity, keen administrative ability and high scholarship will have satisfactory answers to these questions. Many detractors allege that he is taking spite on me for his unsuccessful attempt to have me dismissed by the Board of Trustees. I am sure that his statement in which he found no grounds for my dismissal released to the press recently belies any malicious slander of that nature. Dr. Veal, who has the courage to defy the Governor of South Carolina and to imply that Bishop Bonner lied when the latter said that President Veal asked him to call the last meeting of the Board of Trustees, is a man whose motives must never be impugned without giving him a chance to defend himself by answering the above questions."

The professors, having come to Allen with very high recommendation, and have been under attack are outspoken advocates of integration, and hove bee nunder attack since early in 1957.

Information close to Governor Timmerman's office indicated that the State Board of Education order to deny Allen's graduates certification to teach in South Carolina public schools is still in effect with a demand that Allen dismiss the trio of professors.

Bishop Bonner, in an interview in his office, said he may call a Board of Control meeting of trustees early in May. The General Board will meet prior to graduation.

Several members of the senior class expressed their anticipation in the controversy is with a hope and a prayer."

Allen U. plans [illegible] junior college

COLUMBIA, S.C.—Plans for the establishemnt of a junior college at Conway, S.C., are virtually completed for submission to the Allen University board of trustees, it was announced this week.

The plans, subject to board approval, were developed in response to a request from the county Parent Teachers Association.

The plan calls for opening of classes on Sept. 15, offering courses corresponding to the freshman program at Allen. Additional courses will be offered in later years as the demand indicates.

The junior college project was initiated following study by a citizens committee which indicated a need for higher education facilities in the community.

Baltimore

FOLLOWING a recent executive committee meeting, the Allen University National Alumni Association recently voted to launch a drive to match a $10,000 gift from the Danforth Foundation.

Plans for the drive were outlined at a meeting attended by J. T. W. Mims, alumni association president; Bishop I. H. Bonner, Seventh Episcopal District prelate, Dr. Frank Veal, Allen president, and the Rev. Fred C. James, publicity chairman.

A special executive session is planned for 11 a.m. Sept. 6 in Flipper Library on the Allen campus for alumni chapter officers and others interested in the drive.

Clennon King Out in the Cold Again

2 'Profs' Lose Jobs, 2 Facing Eviction

Courier Pittsburgh Pa.

Sat. 5-10-58 P.S.

(Pittsburgh Courier Press Service)

Two controversial college professors were among the nation's unemployed last week and a third was taking a long look at some ominous handwriting on the wall in the wake of action taken by the administrations of three schools.

In Columbia, S. C. Allen University's President Frank Veal sent an "eviction" notice to Dr. John G. Rideout informing him that he and his family must vacate their faculty home by May 26.

Dr. George Kent, an English professor at Delaware State College in Dover was dismissed from his job. And, in Alcorn, Miss., Clennon King, a history instructor at Alcorn A&M College was given the heave-ho from his job by President J. D. Boyd.

KING'S DISMISSAL at Alcorn was curt and to the point with Dr. Boyd's ouster letter stating: "This letter is to inform you that your contract will not be renewed at the end of the 1957-'58 school term. You are free to leave the campus at any time you wish."

King's reply was, in part, "I have tried to be a friend to Mississippi. Apparently Mississippi has rejected my friendship. What should I do?" He also cried, "Someone decided that I be made Mississippi's sacrificial offering to NAACP. Is my destruction all that NAACP wants?"

• At Dover, Kent traced the cause for his ouster to the claim that he had written a letter criticizing a restaurant for having refused service to K. A. Gbedemah, Ghana's finance minister. In addition he had been an active member of the NAACP. School board members in opposition to Kent said that his association with the NAACP made it difficult to get appropriations from the state legislature. Dr. Jerome A. (Brud) Holland is Delaware state's president.

COLUMBIA, S. C. (ANP)—Like his fellow-white professor, Dr. John G. Rideout, 42, Dr. Forrest O. Wiggins, 50-year-old faculty member of the AME-financed Allen University, was given notice to cate quarters he occupies in the 16-unit Richard Allen Apartments.

CLENNON KING
. . . dismissal notice

In Columbia, Dr. Rideout, one of two white faculty members whose ouster had been demanded by Gov. George Bell Timmerman, said that the ouster action was "unChristian." The point at issue here seems to be the fact that Dr. Rideout, and family, by living in the faculty area are evidence of integrated housing in practice.

Re-Accreditation Requested

Negro College's Plea Is Held Up

14e(1)

COLUMBIA (AP)—The South Carolina Board of Education took no action Friday on a last-minute request by Allen University for the return of official state sanction before the end of the school year.

News & Courier 5-9-58

The board remained in session until a special courier arrived from the church-supported Negro college with the hastily drawn request. But then members adjourned without opening the message.

Sat. 5-17-58

State Supt. of Education Jesse T. Anderson said the request was addressed to Gov. Timmerman, ex-officio member of the board, who was not present at the meeting. He said any action prior to the next board meeting in late June would be up to the governor.

Charleston, S.C.

The meeting was the board's last of the current 1957-58 academic year. That means that Allen students who graduate later this month are not accredited to teach in South Carolina public schools.

The college was withdrawn from the state accredited list last September in the still continuing controversy over faculty members with alleged leftist leanings.

The Allen Board of Control announced Thursday that the three Allen professors under fire would not be rehired when their contracts expire at the end of this month.

Gov. Timmerman had made accusations of communist leanings against the Allen professors as well as three faculty members at Benedict College, another church-supported Negro institution at Columbia.

Red Influence Laid To Trio By Timmerman

A-6B

COLUMBIA (AP) — Allen University Wednesday dropped from its faculty three professors Gov. Timmerman charged with being communist-influenced.

News Courier 5-16-58

The 172-member Board of Trustees met without renewing contracts of the three. This was the recommendation of the much smaller Board of Control which met May 15.

Sat. 5-17-58

ENDS MATTER

President Frank Veal of the church - supported Negro institution said Wednesday's action ends the matter and the professors will not return.

Charleston, S.C.

The controversial faculty members are John G. Rideout and Edwin Hoffman, both white, and Forrest O. Wiggins, a Negro.

NO ACCREDITATION

The State Board of Education withdrew accreditation of Allen graduates to teach in South Carolina in protest of the presence of the three on the faculty.

Allen applied for a return of accreditation at a recent board meeting, but no action was taken in the absence of Gov. Timmerman, ex-officio chairman.

Wiggins said after the May 15 meeting that Allen officials had "surrendered completely to the demands of Gov. Timmerman."

He charged that the dismissal came "without any statement of charges and without a hearing."

Veal has said the dismissals were "for the good of the university."

Allen U Plans To Match $10,000

COLUMBUS, S. C. — At an emergency session of the executive committee of the National Allen University Alumni Association, plans were outlined for a fund-raising campaign to match dollar for dollar the Danforth Foundation's gift of $10,000 to Allen university for scholarships, teacher salarie and improvements.

Reporter's Post 5-23-58

The drive will terminate in a special rally at 9:30 a. m. Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 27. The alumni must raise $10,000 before the gift can be received. The drive has been set for $25,000 so the University may take care of current expenses, and receive $35,000 from the project.

Individual pledges to be paid in full by Thanksgiving were made by 40 alumni and friends. These pledges ranged from $100 to $25 and amounted to approximately one-seventh of the campaign funds needed.

Mrs. Ruth Harmon Bouknight paid her pledge of $100 at the meeting. John H. Sengstacke, Publisher of the Defender, made a $25 contribution to kick-off funds from the West.

Other alumni and friends are asked to make their contributions through ttheir local chapter or directly to the national association, Box 100. Allen University.

Dr. Harrison J. Bryant Gives Certified Check For $1,000.00 To Allen University

Along with the masterly and brilliant commencement address delivered by Bishop Joseph Gomez and the large number in the graduating classes, one of the high points of the commencement exercises at Allen University was the presentation of a certified check for One Thousand Dollars by Dr. Harrison J. Bryant to President Frank Veal for Allen University.

Dr. Bryant, who is an alumnus of Allen, said, for quite some time he wanted to do something for Allen, and now he was happy that the time had come that he could.

Rev. Richard P. Hall of Baltimore, Maryland, assisted Dr. Bryant in securing this generous contribution for Allen University.

Allen students rejected again; four more apply

14e(1)

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Three Allen University students, who filed applications by registered mail Jan. 16 after these had been refused a few minutes earlier by a University of South Carolina official, had both their applications and deposit returned early this week.

The trio had submitted completed application forms and a $10 deposit, seeking to take entrance examinations on or about Jan. 27.

Meanwhile apparently backing up their across-the-street rivals at Allen University, four unidentified Benedict College students also sought entrance examination blanks in the office of Dr. W. C. McCall at the University of South Carolina Wednesday.

DR. W. C. McCALL, director of the examining and counseling bureau, to whom the Allen students had applied on Wednesday for blanks, then to secure otherwise, returned the forms and funds, together with a letter, which said in part:

"As I told you, I cannot accept your application."

He declined to disclose identities of the students. The Allen students have requested that their names be withheld, at least for the present.

The next step of these students didn't appear definite immediately. One Allen University official told the AFRO:

"IT'LL BE UP to federal courts now. Those kids have gone about as far as they can go and I think they've handled this situation soberly and wisely. They should be commended."

Asked if the students, all seniors, would undertake a lawsuit in light of the fact that normally they are expected to complete college work by the end of May, the official said: —"Oh, they could do graduate work at the university. They have time."

14e(1)

He saw the Allen students as firing the first shots in a contest which is certain to result in an integrated USC.

Meanwhile, two other sources—one administrative and the other from the college's trustee board—lent credence to reports that one of Allen's three professors, whose presence on the faculty touched off the series of incidents leading to the USC attempts, may leave the college before the second semester begins next week.

BOTH OF these told the AFRO they understood that the professor, who is one of the two whites in the trio, had been offered immediate employment at a Southern state college and that that college had sought a release from the Allen administration, which had been given.

Neither source, however, could say whether or not the professor would accept the new position, which povides a higher salary than he is being paid at Allen.

"There are certain academic and professional, as well as mitigating circumstances, which might lead him to refuse it," this source said of the professor.

THE ALLEN dispute developed after the state board of education, last Sept. 9, dropped the college from the state's accredited list, pending dismissal of three of its professors.

Gov. George B. Timmerman Jr. had implied in his "State of the State" address to the General Assembly Jan. 15 that the men had had too liberal associations at meetings and in delivering speeches.

Although Timmerman didn't call names, the three men, Drs. John G. Rideout, Edwin Hoffman (both white) and Forest O. Wiggins, have twice been the principal subjects at two meetings of the Allen board of control (trustee executives). They have refused requests for voluntary resignations.

UNDER TERMS of the suspension, no Allen student graduating in education can either do practice teaching in the state's public schools, no secure teaching jobs in public schools. About 80 percent of the 1958 graduating class is affected.

There were unofficial reports of "feverish" work during last week between and among state and Allen's administrative forces to work out a solution.

"Extensive" pressure from whites had been reportedly leveled at both the state board of education and Governor Timmerman's office, which is being blamed for the attempts of Allen students to break down the color barrier at USC.

Dr. Jesse T. Anderson, secretary of the board, faces an election contest this summer. Originally, he received the overwhelming support of colored voters.

Allen University Will Not Yield To Timmerman Forces

COLUMBIA, S. C.— Dr. Lutrell Long of Atlanta, Ga., set the tempo Friday for a rousing Allen University Founder's Day program in which AME ministers and the president of the university vowed not to surrender our rights as a private, Christian institution."

The theme of the program was "Don't Surrender," an obvious message to South Carolina Gov. George Bell Timmerman, Jr., and to the State Board of Education. On Sept. 9, the board apparently dropped Allen from the state approved list because the school refused to drop three professors the governor considered "leftwingers."

Dr. Frank R. Veal, president of the 88-year-old AME Church-supported university, said, "We are willing to be starved, and to suffer freezing weather before we surrender our rights as a private, Christian institution."

Dr. Long, pastor of Atlanta's Flipper Temple AME Church, declared that "the bitter cries of Timmerman, Gov. Griffin of Georgia, Sen: Eastland of Mississippi "and other antagonists of racial progress are but the agonizing cries and wild screams of those undergoing the labor pains in the birth of an integrated era."

He predicted the "day in which colored boys and girls will attend the University of South Carolina; and white boys and girls will be attending Allen University."

All of the charges initiated by Timmerman against the three Allen professors, two of whom are white, have been denied.

'We'll Starve Before Surrendering Our Rights,' Allen U. President Declares

Courier Pittsburgh Pa. Sat. 3-1-58

COLUMBIA, S. C.—"We are willing to be starved and to suffer freezing weather before we surrender our rights as a private, Christian institution," Dr. Frank R. Veal, president of Allen University, told a Founder's Day audience last Friday.

The theme: "Don't Surrender," was also echoed by other speakers in a defiance of South Carolina Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr., as the AME Church-operated college observed its 88th year of operations.

THE TEMPO of the celebration was touched off Friday morning when Dr. Lutrell Long, pastor of Flipper Temple AME Church, Atlanta, Ga., told the assemblage of S. C. church leaders:

"The bitter cries of Governor Timmerman of South Carolina, Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia, U. S. Senator James O. Eastland of Mississippi, and the other antagonists of racial progress, are but the agonizing cries and wild screams of those undergoing the labor pains—the death wailings—of dying racial segregation."

Dr. Long foresaw the "day on which colored boys and girls will attending the University of South Carolina, and the day on which white boys and girls will be enrolled at Allen University."

THE REFERENCES he and other speakers made to Governor Timmerman were obviously notices of the Sept. 9 State Board of Education's dropping of Allen from the state approved list, allegedly because of the presence of three professors the Governor claims to be left-wingers.

The professors, two of them white, have denied the charges.

Dr. W. J. Trent Jr., executive director of the United Negro College Fund, whose address Friday night climaxed the celebration, warned against being "a cipher."

"Southern white people may not agree with your principles and position," he declared, "but they will always admire you for standing firm to the position you take."

Similar thoughts were also echoed by Bishop Samuel R. Higgins, former president of Allen, who told the audience Friday afternoon that:

"The AME Church was founded on the principle of racial equality and integration. I'm sure we shall forever stand on that principle."

THE UNIVERSITY awarded two honorary degrees in a special convocation.

The Doctor of Laws degree was conferred on Albert W. Williams of Chicago, president of the Unity Mutual Life Insurance Co., and the degree of Doctor of Divinity on the Rev. John W. Edwards, in absentia.

Allen's trustees, in a special meeting Friday, voted unanimous confidence in Dr. Veal, who has defied the state's ouster demand of the professors, and reorganized the executive committee of the board.

They Agree—W. J. Trent Jr., executive director of the United Negro College Fund; Bishop I. H. Bonner and Dr. Frank R. Veal, president of Allen University, Columbia, S. C., left to right, agree that the AME Church college should continue to oppose dictation from Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr., who has sought a voice in selection of faculty members at the college.

Stand Taken In Face Of Pressure, Probe

Daily World
Sun. 4-20-58

COLUMBIA, S. C. — President Frank R. Veal of Allen University, located here, has completely cleared three of his professors of all charges of being "subversive." The three men, all under sharp attack by Dixiecrat Governor George Bell Timmerman, Jr., are Dr. Forrest Oran Wiggins, Dr. Edwin D. Hoffman, and Dr. John Granville Rideout. The latter two are white.

Atlanta, Ga.

Veal's clear-cut vindication of the professors forms the major portion of a sort of "state of the university" article dealing also with "Greater Emphasis on Religion," "Community Cooperation," "Academic Improvements," and "Related Activities."

In the lengthy statement, which is circulating privately among leading white and Negro South Carolinians, Veal states emphatically, "It is the judgment of the President that he cannot, and does not, recommend the dismissal of the three gentlemen whose presence is questioned, on the basis of evidence and the facts disclosed."

CONTINUED RESISTANCE

Veal's unequivocal stand taken in the face of severe pressures of the segregationist government of South Carolina, is seen by competent observers here as a definite indication that the historic AME institution will continue to resist the Dixiecrat onslaught and will once again reelect Professors Wiggins, Hoffman, and Rideout at the May meeting of trustees. Such a course of action is extremely popular on the Allen campus, where integration-minded students already are seeking entry into the all-white University of South Carolina, and also with AME churchmen and Allen alumni all over the country.

The professors, outspoken advocates of integration, have been under attack since early in 1957. On August 6, 1957, the Allen board of trustees unanimously voted to retain them. In September, the State Board of Education, meeting secretly in Governor Timmerman's office, moved to deny Allen graduates certification to teach in the South Carolina public schools. The board let it be known unofficially that certification would not be restored until Allen fired the professors. On January 10, 1958, the Allen University board of trustees met again to consider the problem. Dr. R. W. Mance, a leading trustee and national financial secretary of the AME church which is responsible for the entire support of Allen, charged "political blackmail" by the State, and urged the retention of the professors. President Veal refused their dismissal and they were retained.

Daily World

GOVERNOR REQUESTS PROBE

On January 14, 1958, Governor Timmerman addressing the General Assembly at its opening session, asked for a special investigating committee to expose "communist activities." He specifically attacked three professors at Allen.

Negro groups such as the Columbia interdenominational ministeral alliance and the South Carolina progressive democrats strongly denounced the proposed investigation as an irresponsible attack on the freedom of the private Negro colleges. The Negro pastors served notice on the state that "if such a law is passed, that the legality of the law will be tested in the highest courts of the Federal government." When the state legislature was slow to do Timmerman's bidding, he sent a special message, this time attacking President J. A. Bacoat of Benedict college, and three white professors at this local Baptist college.

Sun. 4-20-58

On April 10, a weary, broke, vote-hungry legislature hurriedly voted to establish an investigating committee with the so-called purpose, "to preserve the government of South Carolina." This is election year.

The Veal statement charges that police agents of the Governor "first presented the issue" of the three professors in his office a year ago. Veal declared the University proceeded to make a full investigation of their charges and fully satisfied itself that the charges were absolutely groundless. Veal also states that the "Data sheets of the three gentlemen report each of them as a loyal American."

ALLEN UNIVERSITY

'The governor of S.C. has never sent for me'

CHICAGO— "The governor of South Carolina has never sent for me," Bishop I. H. Bonner, presiding bishop of the South Carolina area, stated here Wednesday in discussing the Allen University controversy.

He was addressing AME Church bishops and members of the brotherhood in Grant Memorial Church where the Rev. Harvey Walden is pastor.

Aproximately 250 brotherhood members, presiding elders, ministers and laymen form all Episcopal districts in the U.S. heard the prelate declare;

"A man that doesn't believe in Jesus Christ and God should not teach in a church-regulated school.

"He has no place in a church-regulated school. I hope the day will come when the president (Dr. Frank Veal) will refer certain ones to the board of trustees to be fired.

"When I get to the place where I can't stand for what the church stands for, I will retire."

He was not present at the Tuesday meeting of church college presidents and seminary deans.

However, on Thursday, the closing day of the Brotherhood organization meeting, Dr. Veal made the following statement:

"As president of Allen University I will not allow any outside influence to dictate administrative policies of Allen University.

"My first concern is the welfare of the students. My major consideration in all future dealings will be the welfare of the students.

"The entire matter has been the outgrowth of a number of incidents which have not been clearly defined to the public.

"I assure you, my fellow churchmen, that I will not forsake the fundamental philosophy of African Methodism or of the founding father, Richard Allen."

Is Benedict Timmerman's next victim?

A lot of people will tell you that it is—some of them in position to have a pretty fair idea of what's coming up.

The AFRO was told that Benedict, operated by Baptists and under supervision of an integrated board of trustees as well as with an integrated faculty, had rebuffed Timmerman's advances several months ago and the fact has left the governor "quite miffed."

UNLIKE ITS ACROSS - the-street AME Church rival, Allen University, Benedict College, has usually had an integrated faculty, except for a few short years about 10 years ago. It is affiliated with the American Baptist Home Mission Society.

Not only do Benedict and Allen share professors for several courses, but they also assign their students to classes on the other's campus and operate jointly a summer school, which last year was the largest along the Atlantic Seaboard.

"As soon as the Allen case is settled, Benedict is next on the list," the AFRO was told.

Because Benedict's president had not been cooperative with attempts of the state to "investigate its faculty," the AFRO's informant predicted the state will be "hard and rough" on the institution.

So. Carolina Bias Charged By Professors

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2 (ANP) — The American Association of University Professors today accused South Carolina Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr. of using state authority to interfere in the operation of a private Negro teachers college.

Dr. Robert Carr, A. A. U. P. general secretary, said the South Carolina Board of Education appeared to be trying to force the resignations of three professors at Allen University by revoking approval of the school's teacher training program.

The effect of the board's action, taken on Sept. 5, was to bar graduates of the Negro school from state-paid teaching jobs in South Carolina. Gov. Timmerman is chairman of the board.

Peremptory Tone Charged

Dr. Carr also said Gov. Timmerman had used a "premptory tone" in refusing to discuss the case with the A. A. U. P., which investigates dismissals of college professors where their academic freedom and tenure rights appear to have been violated.

Gov. Timmerman in effect told the A. A. U. P. to mind its own business when the organization asked on what grounds the state board had witheld its approval of Allen University's training program.

"Our state is concerned with protecting all its peoples and your authority to question its official action is without recognition," he wired the organization.

Endorsed Stand of Dr. Veal On State Interference

KIRKWOOD, Mo. — (ANP) — The Brotherhood of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, an organization of some 3000 ministers of the denomination, meeting recently in Chicago, Illinois was confronted with the urgency of the present Allen University situation and the position of the State of South Carolina, through its Governor, Mr. Timmerman. Participating in the discussion were the present Bishop and chancellor of the area, I. H. Bonner and the former Bishop, Frank M. Reid, Allen University prexy, Frank Veal and other leading ministers in attendance at the meeting.

President Ralph Jackson of Memphis, Tenn. wanting to state clearly the Brotherhood's position on this vital issue, directed the Commission on Pronouncements of the Elders to issue a statement.

ENDORSED BY 500 MINISTERS

"In the light of the action of the State of South Carolina in denying graduates of Allen University, a school accredited by the Southern Association, the right to be certified as teachers in South Carolina and subsequent vents; we, the members of the Brotherhood of the AME Church, reflecting the attitude of over 500 ministers who attended our recent Chicago meeting make the following statement:

1. W unequivocably endorse the stand taken by Dr. Frank Veal, President of Allen University, in his refusal to permit the State to interfere with the administration of the University ;and we commend him for maintaining the traditional policy of the AME Church in admitting to its schools, any qualified student regardless of race, color, or national origin;

2. We refuse to surrender Allen University to threats and intimidation on the part of outside forces to dictate the policies of the University;

3. We wholeheartedly affirm our committment to the American ideal of separation of Church and State and we deplore any effort on the part of local, state or national government in violation of this principle.

LOYAL TO THE CONSTITUTION

4. We declare our loyalty to the Constitution of the United States and our abhorence of communism. We support the recent decision of the Supreme Court outlawing racial segregation in the public schools of the land;

5. We reaffirm the historic position of the AME Church as the Champion of equal rights, freedom and brotherhood as expressed in our motto; "God our Father, Christ Our Redeemer and Man Our Brother."

At the next meeting of the Brotherhood in New Orleans on February 19th, a program of supporting action to the leadership of the denomination will be outlined by the Brotherhood. Some 31 Commissions to study the church and its program will report and work will begin on the necessary legislation to achieve these goals for presentation both to the General Board and the 1960 General Conference.

Ultimatum of governor rejected as anger rises

By JOHN H. McCRAY

COLOMBIA, S.C. — In a tumultous three hours meeting, the executive and board of control of Allen University rejected a South Carolina State Board of Education mandate, Friday, and declined to dismiss three professors, two of them white.

The professors, Drs. John G. Rideout, Edwin Hoffman, both white, and Forest O. Wiggins, attended the packed small room in Faith Hall, used as a meeting place for trustees.

It was the second meeting of the executives in which the retention of the men was the prevailing business, the first having been held last Aug. 6.

TEMPERS BLAZED and voices blared often. At one point, a trustee, Squire Morgan of Orangeburg, not a member of the Board of Control, engaged in a heated dispute with presiding officer and board chairman, Bishop I. H. Bonner.

Another hot incident developed when Bishop Bonner tried, without success, to get Dr. Robert W. Mance to yield the floor.

Dr. Mance, a trustee and executive board member, is financial secretary of the AME Church which operates Allen. He maintains offices in Washington, D.C.

THE EXECUTIVES, openly defiant against the state's demand, found possible action stymied, as the meeting progressed. They had expected that both Bishop Bonner and Dr. Frank R. Veal would recommend immediate dismissal of the professors.

Dr. Veal, however, told the session that he could not, and did not, recommend dismissal of the men at the moment.

Following the meeting, Dr. Veal told the AFRO, exclusively:

"It is my position that the office of president at Allen must be recognized. It is he who decides and recommends to trustees who is to remain and who is to go on the Allen faculty."

* * *

DR. VEAL SAID further:

"The entire AME Church would not have stood for my recommending dismissal of the gentlemen today."

He said that members of the senior class had come to him during a 10-minute recess of the meeting and urged that he stick to his position of not firing the professors at that time.

Dr. Veal had, in his brief remarks to the executives, pointed out that:

"Allen University hasn't been respected as an educational institution," in the manner of disapproval by the State Board of Education and, that "professional procedures" had not been adhered to by the state board in making its demands.

DR. VEAL also said that tenture regulations did not permit the summary dismissal of the men as was being urged by the State Board of Education, backed by Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr.

Bishop Bonner, who arrived 35 minutes late for the 11 a.m. session, had given a detailed report earlier in the meeting.

Bishop Bonner reported that following the state's "disapproval" of Allen's teacher-education graduates last Sept. 9, that Dr. Veal had reported on Dec. 12 inability to settle the problem, greatest in which was that Allen's graduates in eduea-tion could not do practice teaching nor get teaching appointments within the state.

BISHOP BONNER said that Dr. E. A. Adams and Dr. C. A. Johnson were added to a special committee, which subsequently, recommended that he, as chairman of the trustee board, discuss the matter with Governor Timmerman.

Bishop Bonner said that he and Mr. Timmerman conferred in the latter's office Dec. 17

"I found the governor most cordial and courteous," Bishop Bonner began, but at this point he was interrupted by boos from a gallery of students and other spectators. He threatened to clear the room of all but Board of Control members if the display were repeated.

TIMMERMAN, HE SAID neither made demands on the college, nor "sent for me, as some newspapers have reported." He said he was appointed by the committee to confer with the governor.

Bishop Bonner recited data chronologically on the issue, and reported several incidents smacking of broken pledges between the professors and board members.

Neither he nor Dr. Veal, answering questions from the floor, would state that assurances had been given that the college would be placed again on the state's approved list were the controversial professors dismissed.

Both, however, had said their primary interest was in the welfare of between 84 and 100 graduating seniors in the field of education.

BISHOP BONNER said the State Board of Education had stipulated that certification of the college had been withdrawn because:

1. The three professors remained at the college.
2. Would not be restored until they were dismissed.
3. The 1958 graduating class would never be certified to teach within the state.

He said that, during a conference with the trio last Dec. 19 he had asked them to resign voluntarily and receive full pay for the remainder of the term "for the good of Allen University."

The men had refused. One of them, he said, Dr. Rideout, had replied he'd been advised by three board members not to resign.

"I am one of the three," Dr. Mance interrupted. Bishop Bonner replied: "I'm just reporting; I'm not engaging in name calling or personalities."

DR. MANCE retorted: "I just want it known that I was one of the three."

Bishop Bonner related that the men, or sympathizers, had circulated innumerable letters, placed items on the college's bulletin boards and distributed mimeographed items in dormitories.

Later, following Dr. Veal's statement, a controversy developed between the bishop and president.

Bishop Bonner said he had called the meeting as board chairman at the request of the president, who, he said, was to recommend the immediate dismissal of the professors.

Since the president "has backed down," he said, "I am ready to adjourn the meeting. I don't hire or fire. That's the president's job, but I want all of you to know that anytime I'm asked to call a board meeting I'll do it."

DR. VEAL TOLD the group he had recommended a meeting but said he hadn't stated he would recommend immediate dismissal of the men.

THE AFRO was told from a high administrative source following the meeting that the professors "won't be around when May 31 comes and may not be around for the next semester."

This source said that "we would rather close Allen than have it thought that the state would dictate to us as to whom we shall hire or admit to our classes."

Dean A. D. Greene said that he had never, since the three men had been on the faculty, recommended any one of them for more than a probationary status at the end of each year.

THIS POINT was reported by Bishop Bonner in his speech. However, making out the case for executives, The Rev. B. J. Glover, pastor of historic Emanuel AME Church in Charleston, told the AFRO:

"The big issue is surrender to Governor Timmerman or continuing the honor and traditions of the AME Church.

"I feel that if we have to do it, regrettable as it might be, we'd prefer to close down our school, lend our efforts to getting Allen's students into the University of South Carolina, rather than take orders from the governor."

HIS WAS about the general thinking of AME national and state leaders who began converging on this South Carolina capitol two days before the Friday meeting.

Another AME minister, the Rev. O. C. Dunham, a presiding elder, expressed the view:

"Governor Timmerman has given support to the three professors by meddling into what is purely a private school matter. There are lots of people who, now, wouldn't fire them, simply because Timmerman has said they should be fired."

Meanwhile, none of the professors had statements immediately; nor would they let photographers take pictures of them. Although they are slated to be discharged after this year, indications were that even this may not go according to schedule, without a battle.

NO SPECIFIC charges have been named by either the administration or the state for pressing for their dismissal.

The college had moved first to fire them, the board of control was told Friday. Bishop Bonner said the state's action could well have come from the college's own move in that direction.

"If we don't want them at Allen," he said, "the state feels that they ought not be here."

Bishop Bonner told the AFRO after meeting Friday:

"There'll be an important announcement on this matter with in the next few days. I can't make it, but suggest that you stay in touch with Dr. Veal."

Gov. Demands Three Allen U. Profs. Be Fired

Must Go

By JOHN H. McCRAY

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Three Allen University professors, two of them white, are slated to be fired with pay, Jan. 10 climaxing a state-Allen University controversy raging since last May.

Bishop I. H. Bonner, chairman of the trustee board of the AME-operated college, while refusing to discuss several events of recent date, told The AFRO Friday:

1. He would recommend the immediate dismissals to the board of control, a subdivision of the 130-member trustee board at a special meeting Jan. 10.

2. He had called the three men into conference on Dec. 19 and informed them of the forthcoming action.

3. That he and other unidentified members of a committee representing the college had conferred with South Carolina Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr., presumably on ways and means of lifting a state ban on Allen graduates, imposed by the state board of education last Dept. 9.

THE PROFESSORS are:

Drs. John G. Rideout, Edwin Hoffman, both white, and Forrest O. Wiggins. Drs. Rideout and Wiggins are listed by the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Last September, Governor Timmerman told a press conference that he had backed state board of education "unanimous" dropping from the accredited list the AME college because the three remained at the privately operated college.

HIS STATEMENT indicated, erroneously, that the board of control had rebuffed Allen president, Dr. Frank R. Veal, in having them removed from the Allen faculty.

Actually, Dr. Veal had recommended to an August meeting of the board of control that the trio be re-employed through the current college year, explaining that faculty tenure regulations did not permit their dismissal at the time.

Immediately afterwards, during a press conference in his office, Dr. Veal told newsmen that the college didn't have the aproximately $18.000 available for on-the-spot payment for the year to the trio.

UNDER CONTRACT terms, he explained, the three men could have been fired then, provided they were, at the same time, paid in full whatever salaries were due them for the remainder of the year.

Beyond confirming that he had conferred with Governor Timmerman and the trio, saying, "we agreed there would be no publicity from either side about the matter. I understand though that the other side has done some talking."

BISHOP BONNER would not discuss details of the arrangements whereby the university is to recover its accreditation.

"I feel my duty is to report to the trustees," he said. However, he promised the AFRO a statement at that time.

Various reports, otherwise, state that he, Dr. E.A. Adams, histographer for the denomination, and Dr. C. A. Johnson, of the state education finance commission and a member of the Allen faculty, were, or were among, those conferring with Governor Timmerman.

Dr. Veal was out of the city for the holidays, his secretary reported, and wasn't available for comment; however, another confirmed reports that because of the suspension, several of the approximately 90 Allen seniors in education had been barred from practice teaching experience because of the state board's action.

Dismissal of 3 professors is protested

WASHINGTON — The American Association of University Professors last week entered the South Carolina-Allen University teachers accreditation controversy with a blast at Gov. George Bell Timmerman.

Dr. Robert Carr, AAUP general secretary, accused the South Carolina governor of using state authority to interfere with the affairs of the privately - supported AME Church - controlled college at Columbia.

Factors in the controversy which has raged since last May include the enrollment of a white Hungarian refugee student; trustee refusal to dismiss three professors from its faculty, and revocation of approval of the school's teacher training program by the South Carolina State Board of Education.

DR. CARR'S blast at Governor Timmerman, who heads the state board of education, came after an exchange of wires in which the AAUP requested information on the board's action, which has the effect of barring Allen graduates from public school teaching jobs in the state.

According to Dr. Carr, the governor made a "premptory" refusal to discuss the case and questioned "authority" of the AAUP to question an "official action" of the board.

"Our state," said Timmerman's wire, "is concerned with protecting all its peoples, and your authority to question its official action is without recognition."

TERMING the reply "wholly unacceptable," Dr. Carr said that his association "takes the position that the welfare of the academic profession is of national concern, not state concern alone."

(The AAUP investigates cases of dismissals of professors where academic freedom and tenure rights appear to have been violated.)

The professors whose jobs are involved in the controversy are Drs. Edwin Hoffman and John G. Rideout, white, and Forest O. Wiggins. Drs. Rideout and Wiggins reportedly have been listed by the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Although the State Board of Education has given no official reason for its withdrawal of the school's teacher training program, Governor Timmerman told a press conference in September that he had backed the board's "unanimous" action because the three remained on the college faculty.

Earlier in the year S. C. Atty. Gen. T. C. Callison had described the enrollment at the school of Andre Toth, a white Hungarian student as "against public policy."

Dr. Frank R. Veal, president of the college, asked the three professors for their resignations last May. They refused.

AT A COLLEGE board of control meeting last August, Dr. Veal informed the board that the school was in no position, because of its tenure regulations, to order immediate dismissal of the three since it lacked $18,000 which would be needed to pay out their contracts.

He made it clear, however that he was not withdrawing his request for their resignations.

Suspension of the school's teacher training program approval followed a few weeks later.

BISHOP I. H. BONNER, chairman of the Allen Trustee Board, told the AFRO that he was satisfied that the state's interest in the three men had 'no racial implications."

Neither Dr. Veal, nor any other administrative officer of the school would talk "for the record" during the week, stating that they had agreed not to discuss any phase of the case "for publication" and that they would present reports to the meeting of the college board on Jan. 10.

Meanwhile, Bishop Bonner indicated that dismissal of the men would be recommended at the January meeting.

BISHOP BONNER also took exception to a statement in last week's AFRO to the effect that he had informed the three professors on Dec. 19 that their dismissals, effective at the end of the current semester, would be recommended at the Jan. 10 meeting.

"The president, not the bishop, does the hiring and firing at Allen," he said. "Somebody might get the idea that the bishop is trying to take over the president's job if this statement isn't clarified."

While denying that he said that he had met with Governor Timmerman on the Allen matter, Bishop Bonner declined to deny that such a meeting did take place, and said that his role and position would be fully covered in his report to the trustee meeting.

He admitted however, that he had informed the three professors that he felt that the Board of Control would support Dr. Veal's recommendations.

Says Allen U. 'sells soul to S. Carolina'

Afro-American, Baltimore, Md.
Sat 1-11-58

By DR. LEWIS. K. McMILLAN

STRATFORD, Conn. — I have just read in your Jan. 4 issue the sad news of Allen University's selling its soul to the Dixiecrats of South Carolina!

I knew somehow that it would happen and yet I hoped against hope that somehow it would not.

The first thing that I said to myself after reading the news item and your accompanying editorial was: "Well this Bishop Bonner has certainly pulled a boner!"

And yet that is only one factor in the equation.

* * * *

IT IS tragically true, all too true, that the church leadership is the last place to look for moral courage and dedication to an ideal when it entails challenging material sacrifice.

And most any other bishop (or Baptist convention president) would have pulled the same "boner" which the tragic Bishop Bonner pulled in this case.

Some very familiar names appear in the news items as leaders in the appeasement conferences with Gov. George B. Timmerman.

THESE OLD fashioned South Carolina "race leaders" constitute another determining factor in this tragedy. It has never failed in any crisis that these self-appointed peace-seeking time - serving "leaders" have sold their people "down the River."

Allen University's (90) 1958 college seniors and their parents and relatives and friends are also quite a determining factor in this crisis.

They will pay any price to strut across the stage at commencement time, all dressed up and robed down with a little white unluckly job ticket in their trembling hands.

Alas! Why does it so happen that Allen University's entire senior class is majoring in education, looking forward to teaching in South Carolina's public schools! The answer is too clear for discussion.

Allen Board Meeting Set At Columbia

News & Courier, Charleston, S. C.
Fri 1-10-58

COLUMBIA, Jan. 10 (AP)—The Allen University board of trustees is slated to meet tomorrow with the possible dismissal of three of its professors apparently the main matter to be discussed.

The State Board of Education's decision last September to withhold teacher certification from graduates of the Negro Methodist school here was believed hinged on the school's retention of the three faculty members.

The board gave no official reason for its decision but one board member said off-the-record that Allen will "have to get rid of those three professors if they want their teacher training program recognized."

PROFESSORS INVOLVED

The professors involved are John G. Rideout, Forest O. Wiggins and Edwin Hoffman.

The names of Wiggins and Rideout appear in the files of the House Un-American Activities Committee. Rideout and Hoffman are white.

Wiggins said recently that the main reason for tomorrow's board meeting was to discuss dismissal of the trio. He said he was informed of the impending action on Dec. 19.

The Negro professor said he was given no reason for the dismissal action.

STATEMENTS EXCHANGED

The issue gained the spotlight last week because of an exchange of statements between South Carolina Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr. and Robert K. Carr, general secretary of the American Assn. of University Professors.

First, Carr sent a telegram to Timmerman requesting information about the withholding of teacher certification from Allen graduates.

The governor replied that he would not recognize Carr's authority to request such information.

Carr termed Timmerman's reply "curt" and "most unfortunate." Miffed in turn, the governor told Carr he could find an answer to his "political whimpering" in the files of his own organization.

Board Meets But Doesn't Take Action

News & Courier, Charleston, S. C.
Sat 1-11-58

COLUMBIA, Jan. 10 — Three Allen University Professors, center of a controversy over the withholding of state teacher certification from the Negro institution, today won a big round in their fight to continue on the faculty the rest of the 1957-58 school year.

The school's executive board, meeting to consider dismissing the trio, adjourned without taking action after University President Frank R. Veal announced he would not recommend the step "at this time."

Veal's statement drew a charge by Bshop I. H. Bonner, board charman, that the school head had "backed out" on an agreement.

PROMPTED ACTION

The bishop and other officials indicated that the presence of the three professors prompted the State Education Board to withdraw teacher certification from Allen education graduates last September.

Bishop Bonner asserted that Veal had asked him to call the board meeting "to get rid of these men" and open the way for restoring certification.

Veal, however, declared at the public session, which was packed with faculty members and students:

"I don't believe the church (African Methodist Episcopal Church, which operates the school) or the people of South Carolina want this done."

URGES BOARD

Urging the board to have "confidence in me," Veal said, "I will do anything to obtain re-certification. . . but I will not recommend their dismissal at this time."

Bonner warned the board that failure to dismiss the faculty members could mean "the death of Allen University."

"We can't exist," he said, "without certification. I'm told most of our 90 senior teacher students plan to transfer next semester in order to be eligible for certification."

Veal said earlier during the long, often-heated session that he intended to "follow recognized academic procedures" in handling the cases of Profs. John G. Rideout, Edwin Hoffman and Forest O. Wiggins. Both Rideout and Hoffman are white.

All three were notified, earlier, Veal said, that he will recommend dismissal May 31, when the school year ends.

The professors were given an academic year's notice of dismissal by the board last summer.

ASKED TO RESIGN

Veal and Bonner said they have been asked to resign "for the good of the school" on several occasions since but refused.

Allen was notified by the State Education Board Sept. 9 that its education courses no longer would be acceptable for teacher certification.

Bonner said he met Dec. 17 with Gov. Timmerman, education board chairman, to determine "what could be done to get the certification back."

The church official drew a chorus of boos when he said Timmerman "impressed me as a very fine man."

The governor, Bonner related, told him that "there was nothing political or racial in the board's decision.

NOT GOOD INFLUENCE

"He said the board felt that the three men could not possibly exert a good influence on the university in view of their refusal to resign at the request of the president following the recommendation by the dean of the faculty."

Because of the faculty difficulties, Bonner continued, the governor said the board felt its action was justified.

Won't Fire Professors

Dr. Veal Defies Governor

COLUMBIA, S. C.—President Frank Veal of Allen University has quelled rumors to the effect that he was going to "sacrifice" three members of his faculty in order to comply with a state of South Carolina edict handed down by Gov. George Bell Timmerman.

• Dr. Veal said Friday that he is refusing to recommend the dismissal of the three professors, two white and one Negro, who are under fire from the state.

• Dr. Veal told the Courier, "It is within my power to decide who is or who isn't to teach at Allen."

DR. FRANK VEAL

The senior class of the school, despite the fact that the State of South Carolina has refused accreditation to the school, is standing solidly behind Dr. Veal in the dispute.

HOWEVER, Dr. Veal said that he didn't know whether or not the board of directors would stand by his decision.

Allen got in bad with the state after it admitted a Hungarian student in the fall semester.

A dispute also arose between the school and the state over the three professors who have been called "un-American" by white supremacist elements in Columbia.

IN A LATER statement to the Courier, Dr. Veal said:

"I refused to recommend dismissal of the professors involved. I didn't feel that the AME Church could hold its head up and that the university could be respected as an educational institution other than by following due academic process. The senior class was opposed to any action against these professors, regardless of what it would cost them, because it felt such action would be against freedom and academic responsibility."

Allen Professors Blast Timmerman

By JOHN H. McCRAY

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Allen University's three professors, center of the university's clash with the state, unleashed a denunciation of Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr. Thursday night following the latter's accusations against them Wednesday.

The men, Drs. Edwin Hoffman, John G. Rideout and Forest O. Wiggins, in a jointly signed statement issued exclusively to the AFRO, were taking note of Timmerman's charges that they had attended and participated in meetings of groups he obviously considered "bad company."

FOLLOWING is their reply:

"If Governor Timmerman had not spent so much time in his speech justifying segregation, his concern for the well-being of a colored college might possibly have had the ring of sincerity.

"The fact of the matter is—and Govenor Timmerman knows it well — the real need here in South Carolina is the achievement of American democracy for all the state's citizens, rather than a committee to investigate so called communistic activities.

"The governor is indeed so obsessed in his address by his fear of integration that he even regards Federal aid for nuclear studies at Clemson College as threatening that institution with communism.

"IF THE governor is genuinely interested in education for good citizenship and faith in God, he would direct the attention of the legislature to the sacreligious act of burning a cross, performed by a group of white students at the University of South Carolina on the day colored students sought admission to the state university.

"It comes with ill grace for the governor to question the religious faith of others when he himself so openly repudiates the fundamental teaching of Him who died that all men might dwell together as brothers.

"It ill becomes a governor who spends so much of his time repudiating the Constitution of our country and endeavoring to undermine his highest court of the land to pass upon the patriotism of other Americans.

"If belief in racial segregation is to be made the definition of loyalty, the vast majority of Americans become disloyal in the eyes of Governor Timmerman.

"THE ALLEGATIONS that Governor Timmerman made against several professors at Allen hardly merit the dignity of a comment.

"The governor is leaning on a feeble crutch indeed when he must drag in as his alleged 'evidence' information he tries to claim he obtained from Allen University.

"This mysterious record, if it ever existed at all, was evidently thought neither truthful nor significant enough to present to Allen's board of trustees or to the instructors themselves, for rebuttal.

"Anyone reading the governor's allegations would see them as shot through with distortions and fabrications."

Ark. solon asks probe of college

MONTICELLO, Ark. (ANP) Sen. Jack S. Shelton last week asked the Arkansas Legislative Council to investigate the political controversy at Arkansas A. and M. College because of reported 'friction' between the president and the board of trustees of the school.

Shelton, reportedly involved in the controversy, said he asked for the investigation because there had been so many charges, countercharges and confusion regarding the situation at the college.

Shelton said "We need an impartial, unbiased investigation to find what the controversy is about and to find some way to restore in the people's mind confidence in the college. Let the chips fall where they may," he added.

The controversy, which first flared in April, was indicative that members of the board intended to have President Horace E. Thompson discharged by March 1, 1959, and replaced by former State Sen. Lee Reaves of Warren.

FIRE DESTROYS GYM OF NEGRO COLLEGE

Adjoining House In Little Rock Also Burns

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 8.—Fire destroyed the gymnasium of the Arkansas Baptist College, a Negro institution, here Saturday afternoon.

The fire also consumed a house adjoining the gym and damaged three other dwellings.

There was no immediate estimate of damages. Rev. O. A. Rogers Jr., who is president of the college, was in Hot Springs on a business trip, his wife said.

She said she hadn't known about the fire until a reporter called. The college has an enrollment of about 250 Negro students this year. It's a four-year college, offering courses in liberal arts and some ministerial studies, she said.

The fire followed a tense week of incidents at integrated Central High School, where several incidents occurred Thursday between white and Negro students.

ARSON IS DISCOUNTED IN BLAZE AT COLLEGE

Calls Said Segregationists Fired Negro Gym

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 9.—(AP)—Fire officials Sunday discounted the possibility that segregationists or any one else touched off the spectacular blale that destroyed the gymnasium of Arkansas Baptist College for Negroes here Saturday.

"I just can't picture arson at all," Fire Inspector V. C. Throckmorton said after a preliminary investigation of the ruins. "The building was to have been condemned shortly anyway."

During the $80,000 fire, newsmen received two anonymous telephone calls boasting that the "Ku Klur Klan" and "segregationists" had set the fire.

Inspector Throckmorton said origin of the fire still has not been determined and his investigation would continue Monday.

He said that any white person in the neighborhood would have been noticed instastly by Negroes. There has been no such report, Mr. Throckmorton said.

The Negro college, with an enrollment of 250, is supported largely by whites. It never has figured in the Little Rock integration controversy.

Arson Discounted In Negro College Gymnasium Fire

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 9 (AP)—Fire officials today discounted the possibility that segregationists or anyone else touched off the spectacular blaze that destroyed the gymnasium of Arkansas Baptist College for Negroes here yesterday.

"I just can't picture arson at all," Fire Inspector V. C. Throckmorton said after a preliminary investigation of the ruins. "The building was to have been condemned shortly anyway."

During the $80,000 fire newsmen received two anonymous telephone calls boasting that the Ku Klux Klan and segregationists has set the fire.

Throckmorton said origin of the fire still has not been determined.

School in Financial 'Chaos'

$60,000 Blaze Dims Ark. Baptist Future

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—An already shaky Arkansas Baptist College teetered further on its already wavering financial axis and pondered what to do since a $60,000 fire made its future even more dismal.

Rev. Oscar A. Rogers Jr., president of the college, said it probably would cost about $100,000 to replace the gymnasium that recently burned.

The gymnasium was insured for $40,000 and the college stands to collect most or all of that, depending on what the insurance company determines is the replacement cost of the building.

THE ADDITIONAL money will have to be raised through some form of public subscription or through the alumni, Rev. Rogers said.

For the remainder of this school term the college has worked out an arrangement to use the Dunbar Community Center for gymnasium classes and basketball games.

Rev. Rogers said the city would not permit construction of another frame structure. The new building will have to be built of concrete or cinder concrete blocks, thereby raising the cost.

THE LOSS of the gymnasium only added to an already dim picture at the college. Classroom buildings are inadequate and new dormitories are needed for both men and women.

In addition to that, the college has a shaky academic standing and an unwielding administrative structure. Rev. Rogers said the college was "in a state of chaos."

The college has about $60,000 raised by white Baptist churches in Arkansas last year, but this money can't be used until a decision is made about moving. Rev. Rogers said the money is needed to improve teaching facilities and to buy classroom aids and laboratory equipment.

Negro Baptist churches raised about $21 000 last year which was used to help bring the college out of debt.

SEGREGATIONIST DEED? — Flames leaped 100 feet into air as fire destroyed frame gymnasium at Arkansas Babtist College in Little Rock recently. While fire raged, unidentified man telephoned a local newsman, identified himself as a segregationist and said "We set it on fire." President O. A. Rogers Jr., estimated damage at $80,000. Firemen said origin of the blaze was not known.

Arkansas act of violence plunges school into plight

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — The destruction by fire of the gymnasium at Arkansas Baptist College has cast the school into financial plight of more than $60,000, it was reported this week.

The Rev. Oscar A. Rogers Jr., president of the college, said the cost of a new gymnasium would be about $100,000.

He added that the gym was insured for $40,000, most of which the school will probably collect. The minister said he was not sure where the remaining $60,000 would come from.

SEGREGATIONISTS, apparently in protest of integration at Central High School here, set the building afire last Saturday.

The Rev. Mr. Rogers stated that funds to build a new gymnasium would have to be raised through public appeal and that the matter would be decided at a board of trustees meeting in March.

He said the loss of the gym was especially serious because of the school's other building needs. New dormitories for men and women are needed.

SPEAKER — Dr. Edith Irby Jones, first Negro to enter and to be graduated from Arkansas University School of Medicine, wife of Dr. J. B. Jones of A. M. and N. College, Pine Bluff, Ark., and mother of two children, addressed more than 2,500 teen-agers, students and principals from 90 schools of the state at Robinson Auditorium in Little Rock.

Atlanta University has recently received a gift of $15,000 from Mr and Mrs. Chauncey L. Waddell of New York to be used for purpose of a collection of contemporary art, President Rufus E. Clement announced this week. This is the second gift from the Waddells for this purpose, bringing the total to $25,000 in the last twelve months.

Mr. Waddell is a trustee of Atlanta University.

It is hoped, President Clement said, that by careful purchasing it will be possible to establish a representative collection of the best works of contemporary American artists.

Works already purchased for the collection include "Subway" by Isabel Bishop, "Clown" by Robert Vickery, "Woman at Mirror" by Victor Tischler, "Galaxy" by Hale Woodruff, "Chinese Vase" by B. J. D. Nordfeldt, "Fishing Boats in Portugal" by William Thon, and "Summer Sunshine" by William Palmer.

New York "Times" On Microfilm Is Granted Atlanta U.

ATLANTA, Georgia—

Atlanta University has been awarded a grant of $600 from the Association of College and Research Libraries for the acquisition of the New York Times on microfilm for the years 1949-1953. The announcement was made by Miss Eileen Thornton, Librarian of Oberlin College and president of ACRL, which is a division of the American Library Association.

The Atlanta University library is one of the eighty-seven libraries to receive a grant from a fund of $30,000 contributed for 1957-58 by the United Steel Foundation, the New York Times, and Remington Rand. Mr. William W. Bennett, librarian of the Trevor Arnett Library at Atlanta University, stated that the University received its grant from $5,000 which was contributed by the New York Times specifically for purchase of back files of the Times on microfilm.

The grants are all in relatively small amounts, varying from $200 to $800 according to the needs and purposes for which they will be used. "Our aim is to place the money widely where it will make a direct, though small contribution to higher education and where it will act as seed money for further library support from local funds," Miss Thornton said.

This is the third year of the ACRL grants program. A total of more than $125,000 has now been distributed in sub-grants by its committee.

Atlanta U. Theological Center Nearing Reality

By WILLIAM A. FOWLKES

The establishment of a $2,500,000 Interdenominational Theological Center in the Atlanta University area was a step nearer reality Friday with the announcement of appropriations by the Sealantic Fund and the General Education Board.

Dr. Harry V. Richardson, president of Gammon Theological Seminary, will be president of the school which will serve as a training center for Methodists, Baptists, CME's and AME's. The cooperation and merger will involve Gammon Theological Seminary, the Morehouse School of Religion, Turner Theological Seminary of Morris Brown College and Phillips School of Theology at Lane College, Jackson, Tenn.

MEETING ON JULY 9

The Board of Trustees will meet in Atlanta July 9 to formulate plans for beginning the construction of a new physical plant on ten acres of land provided by Atlanta University. The new plant will consist of classroom, administration, library and other buildings.

A central board of trustees, composed of representatives from each of the seminaries and seven trustees-at-large will govern the center. Dr. E. C. Caldwell, chairman of the board, was formerly at Emory University, being now president of Southern California School of Theology at Claremont, Calif. Bishop W. R. Wilkes, of the A.M.E. Church, is secretary of the board; Bishop B. Julian Smith, of the C.M.E. Church, is vice chairman and Dr. B. E. Mays, of Morehouse College and the Baptist Church, is chairman of the executive committee.

STATEMENT RELEASED

Dr. Caldwell authorized the release of a long awaited statement on the establishment of the Atlanta Theological Center. Application for the funds had been made some time ago and a state charter of incorporation secured.

Atlanta University Gets Science Program Grant

Atlanta University has received a grant of $239,500 from the National Science Foundation for the 1959-1960 academic year. Grants totalling more than eight and a half million dollars have been made to 32 colleges and universities in support of institutes designed to help high school science and mathematics teachers improve their subject matter knowledge.

This is the third grant made by the Foundation to Atlanta University, the other two having been in support of summer institutes in 1957 and 1958.

Dr. K. A. Huggins, chairman of the department of chemistry at Atlanta University, is director of the institute and all applications for selection should be sent directly to him.

The grants will provide stipends of $3000 each for approximately 50 teachers of high school science and mathematics, with supplementary allowances for dependents and travel.

The Foundation is expanding academic-year institutes because of the success of the program in helping science and mathematics teachers to improve the quality of their teaching through enabling them to keep abreast of the latest scientific developments.

The influence of these teachers on others with whom they come in contact is such that it raises the general level of science instruction in the secondary schools and also provides motivation for students to undertake science careers, the Foundation says.

The Proposed Theological Center

The proposed Atlanta University Theological Center, as designed in accordance with the Sealantic Fund and the General Education Board, rings true to the demands of the times in which we live.

Th e establishment of a $2,500,000 Interdenominational Theological Center in the Atlanta area, would assuredly meet the far dreams of its first president, Edmund Asa Ware, whose remains slumber beneath a huge boulder brought from his native Massachusetts as a public reminder of the great work which he in his short life was not able to complete.

It will be recalled that Atlanta University had in its beginning a plan for the training of ministers in the pattern of Mr. Ware's Alma Mater, Yale Divinity School.

When Dr. Myron W. Adams and the late President John Hope foresaw in their dreams a demand for a powerful graduate school on the Atlanta University campus, many thought their visions transcended the boundaries of the ability of these institutions meeting the heavy financial burdens contingent to any such huge project. The cooperation merger will involve Gammon Theological Seminary, Morehouse College School of Religion, Turner Theological Seminary and Phillips School of Theology, Lane College.

Surely Atlanta, a city of churches and denominations, would welcome a standardized clearance in the demands of the ministry at this time. Such an institution would inquire into the best for curriculums and at the same time be able to command the highest in the profession of training young ministers.

While it might have been in the dreams of the planners to include in this A. U. Center, other graduate courses, it is well that close upon the heels of an already established system of graduate work in the teacher training and social work, something like the high training for ministers should follow.

We are happy to hail this a long-felt need in the lives of our people. A trained ministry is the best asset to any era and history will support this fact.

This project will bring to Atlanta another fine approach to the many problems set before us.

An interdenominational education center for ministers would extend an appeal to all ministers alike. Let us hope this proposal will soon become a reality.

IN ENGINEERING—

Auburn Expected To Regain Status

$125,000 Of Emergency Fund Raised To Bring Two Departments To Standard

AUBURN, May 9 (AP)—Dean Fred Pumphrey of the Auburn School of Engineering said today he expects the school to meet accreditation requirements of the Engineers' Council for Professional Development within the next few months.

The Council disaccredited the Auburn departments of mechanical and electrical engineering last November, because of excess teacher loads and a lack of facilities.

A group of Auburn alumni and the Auburn board of trustees met today and were told that more than $125,000 of an emergency fund has been raised. The group is seeking to raise $250,000.

The money will be used toward bringing the two departments of the School of Engineering up to requirements of the engineers' council.

Roy B. Sewell, president of the Auburn Alumni Assn., and chairman of the emergency fund drive committee, made his report today to about 100 alumni, trustees and others interested in the campaign.

The emergency fund would enable Auburn to hire additional engineering professors and to improve facilities in order to:

1. Regain accreditation in the two departments of the School of Engineering, and
2. To initiate conversion of the present Auburn engineering program to what was termed "a program for the future."

Dr. Ralph B. Draughon, Auburn president, said, "We are asking for this emergency fund to tide our School of Engineering over until the Alabama Legislature meets. We need twice as much money each year as we are asking for during the emergency fund drive, and shall present our full needs to the Legislature when it meets."

"We are coming along in fine shape," said Pumphrey, adding that "If we can make as much progress within the next three or four months as we have made within the past two months, I think we will be able to meet the Engineers' Council requirements within a few months."

He said the emergency fund would provide:

1. $100,000 for employment of additional professors, to encourage professional development of faculty members and to permit a wider research program.
2. $15,000 for improvement of library holdings for engineering, particularly in technical and scientific journals, essential for students and professional research.
3. $15,000 for a program of professional improvement and self study for faculty members.
4. $70,000 for the purchase of new equipment for demonstration, experimentation and research in mechanical, aeronautical and civil engineering.
5. $50,000 for physical conversion of available space for better use under new programs and adaptation for physics, chemistry and mathematics.

Second College Accepts Negroes

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP)—Five Negroes have enrolled at Austin Peay State College at Clarksville, the Tennessee Department of Education said today. It is the second state college to begin integrated undergraduate classes this year.

Education Commissioner Joe Morgan said the five started integrated classes during the week. The fifth will attend Saturday-only classes which normally are at the graduate level. Negroes have enrolled in such courses previously.

Governor Determined To Crush Allen, Benedict

Sat 2-15-58

COLUMBIA, S. C.—South Carolina's Gov. George Bell Timmerman tossed around a little more red paint here last week and it landed across the street from Allen University, hitting Benedict College and its president, J. A. Bacoats.

The immediate reaction to Gov. Timmerman's red herring has been a sea of denials on the part of President Bacoats and the Benedict College Board of trustees.

14e(1)

• Significantly, the Governor's accusations come in the wake of Benedict and Allen College students having applied for admission to the all-white South Carolina University.

• Asserted Gov. Timmerman, "The presence of Communists at these two Negro institutions is in furtherance of a long-range program to promote racial hatred among young and impressionable Negro students looking toward an ultimate Communist goal of creating civil and racial disorders."

The Governor's accusations came in a report made before the General Assembly in which he asked that a committee be appointed to "investigate" Communist influences in the state of South Carolina.

HE DECLARED, "Through the cooperation of the presidents of both Allen University and Benedict College, students in the teacher training program of both intitutions will be brought under influence of Communist workers under a so-called 'exchange program."

He also accused President Bacoats of having consorted with Communist-front activities.

Bacoats had no immediate comment to offer on the Governor's charges, however, Frank Veal, president of Allen said, "I'm sorry to hear of that, I thought things had worked out."

LATER, HOWEVER, Dr. Paul Wheeler, president of Benedict's Board of trustees, issued a statement which read that, "The trustees and faculty of Benedict College are on record as taking a firm stand that the college will not and cannot permit Communists to hold a position on the faculty of staff of the college."

• President Bacoats accused the Governor of not having given the "full report." He said, "The context in which the citation was made leads to the conclusion that the purpose of the citation was to label the president of Benedict College as a Communist. I wish to make the categorical statement: "I am not at present a Communist and do not hold membership in the Communist party. I have never been a Communist nor held membership in the Communist party. And as I se it from where I now stand, I shall never be a member of the Communist party."

Dr. Wheeler's statement also asserted, "The full executive committee of the Trustee Board of the College . . . (is) putting into effect immediately the necessary procedure to remove . . . with equity and justice . . . any and all Communists or persons who promulgate communism found to exist among any of the faculty or staff of the college".

Benedict College, Allen U. Facing Same Problems

p. 1

Special to Journal and Guide

COLUMBIA, S. C. — Two colored college presidents last week gave sharp denials of "Communist" charges hurled at them by South Carolina Governor George Timmerman.

Both Benedict College president, Dr. J. A. Bacoats, and Allen University president Dr. Frank R. Veal, labeled Gov. Timmerman's remarks as untrue.

"I AM AS close to Communism as the devil is to Holy water," said Dr. Veal.

Meanwhile, officials of the two church-related colleges have entered into an agreement to work in close cooperation in all future programs. Pressure from segregationists has created common problems for both institutions.

PRIOR TO THE governor's personal attack on the two educators, the South Carolina State Board of Education announced that graduates of Allen University would no longer be given certificates to teach in the state. Similar action by the state board has been expected against Benedict College.

Dr. Bacoats, meanwhile, issued a lengthy statement denying the governor's charges, and explaining the stand taken by his institution.

IN HIS STATEMENT, Dr. Bacoats said:

"The governor of the state, in his message to the General Assembly Wednesday, January 29, 1958, cited, 'J. A. Bacoats, president of Benedict, while president of Leland College, Baker, Louisiana; sponsored the call for Protestantism Answers Hate dinner forum held in New York, February 25, 1941.'

AT THE TIME that I am charged with permitting my name to be used to sponsor the call of Protestantism Answers Hate dinner forum, I was, besides being president of Leland College, the minister of the First African Baptist Church of Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

"The method used in procuring sponsors was to send a letter or a card to the desk of certaineducators and churchmen. The person so written would be asked to indicate his consent by checking a card or by singing his name to a card.

"THOUGH I HAVE not the slightest recollection of such an organization at that time, yet it is probable that at that time when the war clouds of World War II were handing low and when because of mounting hatred, millions of lives would be snuffed out and Christian nations would be engaged in vicious propaganda of spreading hatred against one another, if the request came to me to permit my name to be used in sponsoring a meeting that was intended to allay hate that I gave my consent.

"But the governor gave a half report; he did not give the full report. The governor did not state to the legislature that the sponsoring agency of the meeting which I may have consented to permit the use of my name was not listed by the House Un-American Activities Committee on February 25, 1941.

"NEITHER DID the governor state to the legislature that the names of a number of the most outstanding churchmen of the various denominations of the nation permitted their names to be used as sponsors of the call.

"The context in which the citation was made leads to the conclusion that the purpose of the citation was to label the president of Benedict College as a Communist. I wish to make the categorical statement: I am not at present a Communist and do not hold membership in the Communist Party. I have never been a Communist nor held membership in the Communist Party.

"AND AS I see it from where I now stand, I shall never be a member of the Communist Party. I confess that I know very little about Communism. But from what I can discern through the fog, Communism is atheistic and anti-religious.

"As to creed, I am a Theist; I believe in the existence of one living God, transcending, yet imminent in the universe. As to religion, I have served for more than 30 years as a minister of the gospel of the Christ and for more than 30 years, I have served as executive officer in religious church-related institutions. Certainly at this age in life, I think it very, very improbable that I would become a Communist."

THE FULL executive committee of the trustee board of the college is putting into effect immediately the necessary procedure to remove—with equity and justice—any and all Communists or persons who promulgate Communism found to exist among any of the faculty or staff of the college.

Meanwhile the two presidents announced that the two schools have joined in a cooperative educational program. Representatives from both boards of trustees met last week to iron out the details of the arrangement.

3 Teachers At Benedict Are Ousted

Journal & Guide

Presence Is Not In Best Interest Of The College

COLUMBIA (AP) — The board of trustees of Benedict College Wednesday announced that three professors, cleared last February on a loyalty basis, will not receive new contracts to teach at the Negro school.

President J. A. Bacoats said only, "Their presence here is not in the best interests of the college."

The board reviewed the backgrounds of the three last February after Gov. Timmerman charged that Benedict had three communist- influenced teachers on the staff.

Timmerman gave such intimate descriptive details of the backgrounds of the professors that two of them volunteered their names publicly.

They were J. Spencer Kennard, a Baptist minister, and Lewis Smith, chairman of the humanities department.

Smith and a third faculty member, Mrs. Marian Davis, lack tenure at the church - supported school and will not be given new contracts under Wednesday's decision. All three are white.

Kennard has tenure and will have an opportunity to appeal the decision of the trustees at a later meeting if he so chooses.

After clearing the three in a Feb. 24 statement, the board reported:

"Under the laws of this country, every person is innocent until proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. The inquiry we have made is such that we could not possibly convict any of those who have been cited to the public."

Asked if Wednesday's action by the board superseded the February report, Bacoats said only: "Their presence here is not in the best interests of the college."

B. M. Edwards, banker and member of the board of trustees left the meeting befort it ended Wednesday.

Asked if this meant he was not in accord with the board's action, he replied:

"I certainly approve of their (the faculty members) not being retained. Under the circumstances I think this is in the best interests of the student body and the college."

He declined, however, to comment on a report that he had resigned or intended to resign.

Dr. Bacoats Defended In "Red" Smear

Ministers Back College President

Journal & Guide Sat. 2-22-58
Norfolk Va.

COLUMBIA, S. C. — The ministers of Columbia have expressed "complete confidence in the character and the loyalty of our government of Dr. J. A. Bacoats," president of Benedict College, who recently was accused of "cooperating" with the Communists in training programs at his institution.

The statement on behalf of Dr. Bacoats was adopted last week by the Inter-Denominational Ministerial Alliance. The statement pointed out that members of the organization "have known Dr. Bacoats personally and have worked with him for around 16 years."

DR. BACOATS and the president of Allen University located here were accused of assisting the Reds in an address to the South Carolina Legislature by Governor Timmerman, but the chief executive mentioned by name only Dr. Bacoats.

Both Benedict College and Allen University have been under pressure recently because of the desegregation issue. Attacks against Allen University started when a Hungarian freedom fighter was enrolled at the institution at the beginning of the school year last fall.

THE MINISTERS' statement said that because of Dr. Bacoat's "faithful service and high moral character, he is held in high esteem in national religious and national educational circles. And he is likewise held in the same high esteem in our state and local religious, educational and civic circles."

The ministers not only solidly endorsed Dr. Bacoats and his record as the president of Benedict College, but went on record as opposing any legislation to investigate the schools of the state for communism. Their statement in part is as follows:

"WE THE ministers of the Inter-Denominational Ministers Alliance of Columbia and adjacent communities, representing around 100,000 persons, view with deep interest and grave concern the recommendation of the Governor of South Carolina of a bill to investigate the schools and institutions of South Carolina for communism. At the same time, we wish to make it crystal clear that we make no defense for communism. We understand that this bill is now in the Judiciary Committee and will soon come to the assembly and the Senate for passage.

"We further wish to differ with the point of view expressed in the editorial in the Columbia Record of February 10. We disagree with the editorial of the Columbia Record when the editorial states, "The Record believes that such an inquiry would be fairly and constructively conducted, and that in the end would be healthy for both colleges and for their good records in the field of Negro education."

"There is a serious doubt in regard to the legality of such a bill which is recommended in the following quotation: "I again urge the establishment of a permanent legislative committee to investigate communist activities in our State with power to subpoena and take testimony under oath and under penalties of perjury."

"The ministers of this organization wish to serve notice that if such a law is passed, that the legality of the law will be tested in the higher courts of the Federal government.

"WE THE ministers, of this organization oppose the passage of such a law because of the political and sectional climate out of which the conception of the law came. The present political climate in the state in regard to race and human relations would make it is very improbable that the proposed investigating committee could act and serve without prejudice and without biasness in the Negro schools.

"The governor claims that the purpose of the bill "is to investigate communist activities in our State." It is reported that the great danger of communism is the threat of communism to overthrow by violence the government of the United States. Those who advocate the above legislation very probably know that there is not now the slightest danger nor does it appear that there will be in the forseeable future the slightest danger of Negroes overthrowing by violence the government.

"THUS BECAUSE the Negro poses no threat of overthrowing the government by violence. it is our sober thinking that the main purpose of such an investigating committee may be an effort to whip and force in line Negroes and any other persons who think differently from certain political leaders in regard to race and human relations.

"THE PASSING of the law and the establishing of this committee on investigation will be, in our opinion, a step in the direction of setting up in our state a "facist gestapo," which shocked civilized nations by the persecutions and tortures of millions of persons wh odid not and who could not accept and go along with certain political ideologies.

"We oppose the proposed legislation because it is not necessary. The Federal Bureau of Investigation is available to all the states and communities. If the leaders of our state really think that there is a threat of communism in our state among any groups, the state has at its request the service of the F. B. I. Hence, the proposed legislation to set up a special committee to investigate communism in the state is not necessary."

Benedict Trustees Committee Clears Faculty Members

Daily News Jackson, Miss. Tues. 3-4-58

COLUMBIA, S. C. (ANP) — In what may be described as a mild slap at Gov. Timmerman, the executive trustees committee of Benedict college last week cleared three faculty members of charges of Communistic leanings. Timmerman had made allegations before the state's General Assembly that communistic influences were present at the college.

The governor's remarks were said to be directed at Dr. J. A. Bacoats, president of the college, and two other members of the faculty. However, the trustees committee found nothing in a probe which it conducted to warant action against anyone.

Last week it issued a statement saying all three suggested faculty members have been cleared of charges. However, it also disclosed that two of three were asked to and signed an anti-Communist statement that they are not and do not propose to become members of or teach the doctrine of the Communist party or any other subversive organization at the college. The third faculty member refused to sign the statement on religious grounds but no action was taken against her by the trustees.

The statement signed by the trio will henceforth be required of every one appointed to the faculty, the committee stated.

Meanwhile, Dr. Bacoats appeared to have won his fight to clear his name of the political charges.

In a public statement, Monday, the school's executive committee completely denied Gov. Timmerman's allegations.

THE REPORT said: "The Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of Benedict College has held three meetings, looking into and considering certain charges or statements indicating that Communistic influences were in existence at Benedict College. No complaint nor notice of any such situation has been presented to either the administration, faculty or Trustees, but having seen in the newspapers statements of this nature the Executive Committee deemed it their duty and obligation to make as through inquiry as possible to clear the situation.

"Charges have been made against some three other members of the faculty. One of these is a man who has lived in many parts of the globe. He has observed conditions in China, Japan, many of the European nations, as well as in America. One of the national reporting agencies says he has attended or taken some part in meetings that were conducted by organizations considered to be un - American, but he is not charged with having participated in any Communistic movement so far as we can learn, and they report definitely that he has not violated any laws of either the State of South Carolina or the United States of America.

"WE HAVE INQUIRED about another man who has been mentioned. The only report we have concerning him is that his record is absolutely clear; they do not report anything deterimental to him.

"With respect to the one woman on the faculty against whom some mention has been made, we understand she is a member of a religious faith that does not subscribe to or choose to sign statements; but we have been unable by inquiry to develop in any instance where she has promulgated or sponsored any Communistic doctrines at the College.

IT IS REPORTED that she has signed certain petitions requesting amnesty for some groups of individuals, but we are informed that many other outstanding people in the nation have done this and in our opinion, this does not constitute Communism or subject them to condemnation when in their opinion they are doing a service for the sake of humanity.

About Dr. Bacoats,, the committee report said:

Certain charges or criticisms appeared to be directed against Dr. J. A. Bacoats, president of the college. We made requests of national agencies who keep fully informed in matters of this kind, and they have reported to us that they cannot find anything that would indicate that Dr. Bacoats now or ever has been involved in any Communistic or subversive activities.

DR. BACOATS has made a public statement in which he admitted that he may have at some time signed some kind of a letter or petition but that if he did so, it was with all good intent and had been signed by many other important and outstanding people, and that he had no intention of doing anything that was not to the best interest of the country.

He has stated that he is not and never has been a believer in Communism; on the other hand he professes absolute belief in the one omnipotent God who governs the universe, and that he could not be a believer in the Christian faith and the religion and teachings of Jesus Christ, the Saviour of the world, and at the same time be a believer in or participate in any way in any Communistic movement.

Benedict Will Ask Non-Red Statements

COLUMBIA, S. C. — On the heels of newspaper stories that four Benedict College students followed up "in person" appeals by four Allen University students for admission to the University of South Carolina by asking in writing for admission to the same school, heads of Benedict College have taken measures to answer further newspaper attacks which charge that "communistic influences are in existence at Benedict College."

Dr. Paul Wheeler, speaking for the entire executive committee of the board of trustees, who had held three meetings on the matter, stated that the charges of criticisms appeared to be directed against Dr. J. A. Bacoats, president of the college, and at least three other members of the faculty. Each made a formal statement that they have no Communist tendencies and explained their reasons for not being communistically inclined.

Two of the male faculty members alluded to have signed non-Communist statements, as well as Dr. Bacoats. The woman refrained, saying that the religious faith to which she belongs does not advocate the signing of any statements, although she and others are reported to have once signed a petition asking amnesty for individuals in trouble due to their faith. However, the faith is entirely pro-American and she has never been involved in anything communistic.

The college will also require all future employes to sign non-Communist statements. The trustees also asked any investigating agency which has definite information of "communistic influence at Benedict College" to furnish suuch information to them, so that the school may rid itself of any such proven activity, which the trustees feel now does not exist.

Benedict professors ordered to resign

By JOHN H. McRAY

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Three white Benedict College professors were given the choice Friday, May 2 of resigning by Tuesday, May 6, or being fired May 6.

Dr. Lewis Smith, head of the division of humanities and professor of English at the college, disclosed the latest development in the Benedict issue in a signed statement released last Friday night.

HE SAID:

"This morning President (J. A.) Bacoats told me and two of my colleagues that we would have to resign by Tuesday, May 6, or else we would be fired the next day at the annual Benedict Trustee Board meeting.

"Dr. Bacoats said the decision to release us at this time had been made by the executive committee of the trustee board."

Dr. Smith declined to name the "colleagues" for the AFRO but said, "they are well known." His statement, however, identified them as white, and "a woman" having Communistic tendencies.

THE DESCRIPTION covers the Rev. Joseph B. Kennard Jr., who came to the faculty six years ago after years of missionary work in China and the Far East.

In an attack on Benedict last January, Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr. had described the Rev. Mr. Kennard, Dr. Smith and "a woman."

Dr. Bacoats had no comment on the Smith report. If there is a statement later, he said, "it will be put in writing."

DR. J. P. REEDER, one of the three colored members of the six - man executive committee, also declined comment.

He said that all statements "will have to come from Dr. Bacoats. I cannot comment pro or con."

Another member of the executive committee, Dr. D. K. Jenkins, said he had "heard rumors but nothing official" about a circulated report that several influential members of the trustee board had threatened to resign unless the three white professors were dismissed.

"Nobody on the board has said anything to me about it, however," Dr. Jenkins said.

Dr. Reeder said he hadn't heard the rumors.

DR. SMITH charged that the release of the professors came "apparently under pressure from the executive committee" which seeks appeasement of unnamed state officials.

He recalled that in an earlier statement this year, the executive committee declared:

"There is no question of our loyalty — that the principle of academic freedom would be upheld at Benedict College, and that teacher's rights would be safeguarded. The ultimatum received today makes mockery of these words."

DR. SMITH'S statement concluded:

"We are protesting to the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and to the American Association of University Professors that the action of Dr. Bacoats is a gross violation of teachers' rights and of academic freedom."

In a February statement, the executive committee of the trustee board had said it was unable to find any basis for communistic charges made by Gov. Timmerman, but welcomed further information and facts from any agency having knowledge of the issue.

Negro College Alumni Seek Rehiring Of 3

COLUMBIA (AP)—A Benedict College graduate said Wednesday an alumni group has agreed to request the Negro school's board of trustees to rescind its decision not to renew the contracts of three white professors.

Mrs. Modjeska M. Simkins said the request was agreed upon at a Tuesday night meeting of alumni and former Benedict students.

CALLED SESSION

She said the session was called by Dr. H. D. Monteith, Columbia physician and banker, and John B. Evans and A. Wilson Simkin,s Columbia businessmen.

The three professors, two men and a woman, were the unnamed targets of Gov. Timmerman when he told the legislature Benedict was harboring faculty members who were Communist-influenced.

THREE CLEARED

Last February the board cleared the three. But on May 7 the board announced the three would not be rehired. One board member said the reason was a lack of public confidence as a result of the charges.

Because of its action against the white professors, the statement from the alumni group said, Benedict risks a loss of accreditation by the Southern Assn. of Colleges and Secondary Schools and financial help from the United Negro College Fund.

Refuses To Resign His Job

Timmerman Accused Of 'Strong Arm'

COLUMBIA, Jan. 31 (AP) — A white professor at a Negro college today said he will not resign despite what he called "the strong-arm tactics" of Gov. Timmerman.

Dr. A. J. Smith said Timmerman's charge that there are Communist faculty members at Benedict College is an attempt to defend racial segregation "by an assault on another private Negro college."

Smith identified himself as one of three faculty members whose activities were attacked by Gov. Timmerman Wednesday in a special message to the South Carolina Legislature. Timmerman did not mention them by name.

Following the governor's message, Smith said, Benedict President J. A. Bacoats asked him and two other faculty members to resign.

'NO CAPITULATION'

"We have not the slightest idea of capitulating to Gov. Timmerman," he said.

Negro students at both Benedict and Allen University, another Columbia private institution, recently sought unsuccessfully to enter the University of South Carolina.

Earlier today, B. M. Edwards Sr., a Benedict College trustee, said the trustees "will not tolerate Communism" at Benedict.

"If there is any Communism out there we don't know about it," he said. "But if we find any we will clean it up."

BOARD TO MEET

Edwards said the board would investigate and meet next week.

In his statement today, Dr. Smith said, "Benedict's administrators may hope to escape the governor's dictatorial interference by resignation or dismissal of professors."

This, he said, is what one of the white members of the mixed board of trustees is seeking. He said the unidentified trustee is a member of a pro - segregation White Citizens Council.

Benedict 2d Target

New attack seen speeding integration

By JOHN H. McCRAY

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Rebuffed by Allen University, Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr., opened a second private school front Wednesday.

He unleashed a broadside at Benedict College, charging that there were three white left-wing professors on its staff and that Benedict's president, Dr. J. A. Bacoats, had been cited by the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Benedict, operated by the Baptist Church, is across the street from Allen University.

APPROACHED by the AFRO, Dr. Bacoats said: I have no comment to make at this time. When and if I do decide, I'll put it in writing and give it general distribution."

But Dr. Frank R. Veal of Allen, whose college was dropped from the state accredited list last Sept. 9, told The AFRO:

"I most certainly regret that Dr. Bacoats has been subjected to this kind of thing."

Later, Dr. Veal said that he and Dr. Bacoats had scheduled a conference, and hinted that the two college presidents might issue a joint statement, or at least develop some kind of united action.

STRONG speculation pointed to an early suspension of Benedict, under which its graduates in education would not be permitted to do practice teaching, or secure teaching jobs in S.C. public schools.

Teacher training is by far the overwhelming majority of work done at both colleges.

In A Nutshell

Broadside seen preliminary to canceling school's state accreditation.

Mass application of high school seniors at University of South Carolina predicted.

State's 350,000 Baptists and 125'000 AME's may unite forces.

Timmerman's attack on Benedict came in a specia message to the legislature which he had asked in his annual "State of the State" report Jan, 15, for creation of a special committee "to investigate Communism in our public schools," and also, to revise current regulations controlling education in the state.

The proposed committee would have power of subpoena and while it would not have power to prosecute, its work might, Timmerman indicated, produce information which would enable citizens to draw their own conclusions.

WITHOUT CALLING names, as in the Allen case, Timmerman listed a number of meetings, and statements he considered "Communistic" against two men and a woman (all white) now employed at the Baptist College.

However, he did single out Dr. Bacoats, whom he accused of attending a N.Y. meeting in 1942, while president of Leland College, which, the Governor said was sponsored by a publication he said was backed by Communists.

Timmerman told the legislature that both Allen and Benedict exchanged professors.

He charged that Dr. Bacoats "has indicated complete indifference" to the presence of the three faculty members, "claiming they are protected fully by 'academic freedom' ".

TIMMERMAN'S CHARGE lends support to The AFRO Jan. 25 story.

The Governor's attack on Benedict came one week, to the day, after four unidentified students from the institution had appeared on the University of South Carolina's campus seeking entrance examination blanks.

They had come one week after 11 Allen students had sought identical blanks from the same office at USC, and six days after three had mailed in application forms they had obtained elsewhere.

Dr. W. C. McCall, director of the USC Examining and Counseling Bureau, to whom all the students applied, returned the Allen forms, along with their $10 deposit money orders, repeating what he had told them personally, "I cannot give or accept your application."

EFFECTS OF the latest Timmerman whip cracking weren't immediately discernible. However, Friday, indications pointed to a uniting of both the AME and Baptist forces in support of the two colleges. The AMEs number an estimated 125,000 persons, and Baptists 350,000 in the state.

Reports continue to mount over the state of high school seniors planning a mass application avalanche on USC and other white only colleges. It is expected that some legal action is certain to come soon in federal courts over the wrangle.

UNIQUE ABOUT the Benedict charges of Timmerman were these facts making a difference between the two colleges:

1. Benedict has an integrated Board of Trustees, the treasurer of which is B. M. Edwards, who had been president of the S.C. National Bank for many years.

Mr. Edwards has been considered the most powerful financial brain behind S.C. governors and state finances. As a Benedict College officer he is also accused in Timmerman's charges.

Two other influential S.C. white board members are Dr. W. M. Whiteside, superintendent of the (Columbia) Baptist Hospital, and Dr. W. Clyde Helms, pastor of the Shandon Baptist Church (retired).

2. Benedict, excepting for a few years recently, has always had an integrated faculty.

Negro School Head Denies Communism

COLUMBIA, Feb. 7 (AP) — Benedict College President J. A. Bacoats said today faculty members challenged as Communist workers by Gov. Timmerman will have to prove their innocence or "forthwith be separated from the faculty."

The head of the church-supported Negro school also declared categorically, "I am not a Communist and have never been one."

In an unusual message to the South Carolina General Assembly Jan. 29, Timmerman said, "Benedict College has several Communist workers and wives of Communist workers on its faculty."

He also listed organizations cited as subversive which he said three Benedict faculty members had joined. He did not name them.

Two Benedict professors, Lewis Smith and J. Spencer Kennard Jr., have replied to the governor's statement.

Bacoats said in a statement today that Benedict "cannot afford to knowingly have on the faculty . . . members of the Communist Party or members of organizations listed by the attorney general as organizations whose purpose is to overthrow by violence the government."

LOYALTY OATHS

He said a system of written loyalty oaths will be installed "as a means of giving greater assurance" no Communists will be employed on the faculty.

Bacoats said in the past faculty members have been asked orally if they are Communists or members of organizations listed by the attorney general as subversive.

Bacoats said it was "probable" that he "may" have consented to use of his name in promoting a "protestantism against hate dinner-forum" in New York in 1941 by the publication, The Protestant Digest, although he had "not the slightest recollection of such an organization."

However, he said he had checked with the Department of Justice and that the publication, cited by Timmerman as a Communist front propaganda organ, "is not on the attorney general's un - American activity list."

SEEKS 'MOTIVES'

He went on to question Timmerman's "motives" in making the address to the Assembly:

"We sincerely hope that it is not the general policy of the governor of South Carolina to label as Communists . . . citizens of the state who do not accept and agree with the governor's point of view on race and human relations."

Bacoats took note of the fact that several Benedict students have made attempts leading to admission to the all-white University of South Carolina.

He said the governor's action, "coming so soon after Negro students are reported to have made applications for admission to the local university has occasioned the report that the governor might be holding Benedict College responsible for the action of some of these students . . . the college had no knowledge . . . of the action of these students until it was reported through news media."

Bacoats also said there were "overtones that strongly suggest that the governor might be . . . making an effort to direct what is being taught in the Negro colleges.

"If this is true, and I sincerely hope that it is not true, then the governor's attack on the college gives to American educators over the nation shock and alarm of an ominous threat to a basic principle of American education, which is academic freedom."

In his address on the state of the state to the General Assembly Jan. 15, Timmerman made similar accusations about Allen University, another Negro school in Columbia.

Allen officials notified three faculty members that their contracts would not be renewed, but did not summarily dismiss them.

The Board of Education withdrew accreditation for Allen teacher graduates because of the continued presence of the three men on the Allen staff.

S.C. students to NAACP: 'We need your legal help'

COLUMBIA, S.C.—Several of the 11 Allen University and four Benedict College students refused application entrance blanks at the University of North Carolina are seeking NAACP legal help.

One student told the AFRO that:

1. The group had written to NAACP secretary Roy Wilkins for help and had received a reply.
2. The matter had been taken to the S.C. Conference of NAACP branches of which Dr. James [illegible] is president.
3. Certain attorneys had been consulted.

'Big lie' technique laid to governor

- Governor reads book that cites religious magazine as "left wing."
- Bennett College head is linked to journal because he signed as meeting sponsor.
- President Bacoats hints Governor Timmerman uses Hitler "Big Lie" technique.

Dr. Bacoats made this observation to the AFRO Friday afternoon while reviewing his eight-page reply to subversive charges the Governor had made on Jan. 29 to the State Legislature.

MR. BACOATS CALLED attention to this last sentence in the Governor's remarks about him:

"The Protestant has been cited as a Communist 'religious' front' and the Protestant Digest as a "Magazine which has faithfully propagated the Communist Party line under the guise of being a religious journal'."

Then, he opened a book, titled: "The Conquest of the American Mind," by Felix Wittmer, published by the Meadocpress of Boston, in 1956. On page 333 of the book the last 17 words in the Governor's remarks are found, verbatim.

Mr. Timmerman had accused the Benedict president of sponsoring the call to a dinner held in NYC Feb. 25, 1941 by the protestant.

He had said that files of the House Committee on Un-American activities disclosed Dr. Bacoats as a sponsor of the dinner, then referred to the publication as being "cited."

DR. BACOATS SAID the Governor had used a trick with the word "cited," that he had left the inference that the citation had been by the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Instead, Dr. Bacoats said the citation came from Wittmer's book which lists the National Education Association, the United Nations and a great number of other organizations as Communist outlets which have never been so listed by a Federal agency.

Wittmer cites the United Nations Bulletin and several Metropolitan Newspapers as subversive.

Dr. Bacoats tossed overboard another contention of the Governor.

"I have the following telegram in my possession," he declared:

"Washington, D.C., 4 159PME —President J. A. Bacoats, Benedict College, Columbia, Socar —a check with the Justice Department indicates Protestant Digest or Protestant has not been listed on the Attorney General's Un-American Activity list."

* * *

DR. BACOATS DECLINED to identify the Washington source who wired the information but from another source the AFRO was given the name of a nationally prominent lawyer who lives in the District of Columbia.

The telegram, plus Wittmer's book, appeared to have cleared Dr. Bacoats completely of the charges the Governor made.

In his statement of reply, however, Dr. Bacoats said that prospective professors at Benedict submit a statement declaring they do not belong to organizations classified as subversive by the Attorney General.

Should such statements be proved false then the professors are immediately dismissed, as per terms of their contracts.

HE SUSPECTED, he said, that the Governor's charges came as a result of four Benedict students' attempt to enroll at University of South Carolina.

The college, he said, undertakes no control over what other colleges Benedict students may seek transfers to.

Warning against the unfortunate ends to which Communist witchhunting might lead, Dr. Bacoats said it may well develop that a person may become "cited" for reading a publication or having a dinner guest. —JOHN H. McCRAY.

Professors Told "Quit Or Else"

COLUMBIA, S. C. — According to authenic sources here, three professors at Benedict College were notified last Friday, May 2, to resign by Tuesday, May 6, or else they would be fired the following day at the annual meeting of Benedict Trustee Board.

In a statement to the press, Dr. Lewis Smith, professor of English at Benedict and one of the three asked to resign, said: President Bacoats told them the decision to release them at this time had been made by the Executive Committee of the Trustee Board.

APPEASE SEGREGATIONISTS

Dr. Smith said the real reason they were being ousted in such undue haste, almost a month before the end of the semester, was because the Executive Committee was to appease the segregationist officials of the State.

In other words it is hoped that this move will remove the immediate threat of loss of centification and a legislative investigation which the State holds over Benedict, Smith said.

The professor of English pointed out that segregation will win an important battle in South Carolina and Negro higher education will be dealt a blow, if three white teachers of open integrationist views are ousted at the dictates of a Dixiecrat governor.

LOYALTY OF THREE

Also stressing the fact that the competence or loyalty of the three teachers had never questions, Dr. Smith said: "We are protesting to the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and to the American Association of University Professors that the action of Dr. Bacoats is a gross violation of teachers' rights and of academic freedom.

"When one notices that one of the professors under threat of dismissal is an elderly Baptist minister and distinguished Biblical scholar who has conscientiously served Benedict, a Baptist college, for six years, the injustice of the President's action is apparent," he added.

Dr. Mordecai Johnson Eulogizes Late Dr. David Jones At Bennett College

Greensboro, N. C.—A single-minded, devoted educational leader and statesman, motivated by love, was the description given of the late Dr. David D. Jones by Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard University, Washington, D. C., as he delivered the address of remembrance at services Sunday at Bennett College.

Dr. Johnson, long-time friend and associate of the late Bennett president (1926-1955), said that Dr. Jones, in assuming the presidency of Bennett, faced a "staggering task" in transforming it from a "system of education embracing elementary, high school and college work" into a woman's college.

"But he knew that while he had the aid of a dedicated faculty and a small band of Christian women, he also had the help of God. And by the exercise of a group of qualities extraordinary to find in any one man, he built it into the first fully accredited college for Negro women ever to come into existence in the United States.

"The ignition of his spirit set others on fire, so that by the time he died, he had increased the financial resources of the college tenfold, and the humblest teacher had a salary that was equal to that at which he began."

Dr. Jones was described as a man who sought "not only the intelligent and the good, but the beautiful" and whose handling of money was done with "scrupulous honor and integrity."

"He did everything in his power to make the Bennett students love one another and to love the homes from which they came," Dr. Johnson declared. "All of those who put their faith in him have been justified, for he has crowned them with glory and honor.

"He has left here an instrument of redemption, ten times more powerful than it was when he received it. Bennett will live on through the ages and as long as it lives, the spirit of David D. Jones will live to bless the children of the people."

Mrs. Anna Cox Davis, of Durham, a 1932 graduate, in her tribute to Dr. Jones, referred to four gifts from the life of the late educator—courage of his convictions, faith in the promise of womanhood, a belief in environmental beauty and education to a purpose.

"He accepted God as the guarantor of all his values," she said, "and his shadow has become a light unto our faces."

The college choir, directed by Mrs. Mary J. Crawford, sang Robert Elmore's "Out of the Depths." President Willa B. Player presided and introduced the speaker.

Greensboro, N. C.—"This business of being a Christian is really a love affair," the Rev. Warren Scott of New York City told the Bennett College Vesper audience Sunday in Pfeiffer Chapel.

"We fall in love with Jesus Chirst and the qualities of kindness, obedience, love and compassion no longer are abstract, but become alive in us."

Father Scott, one of three ministers at St. Phillip Episcopal Church, with a membership of 4,000 was at one time a teacher at Bennett. He said that nothing in life is more important than getting into the presence og Jesus and remaining there.

"If we look at some of the best men and women that civilization has produced," he declared, "Socrates Abraham Lincoln, Mahatna Gandhi George W. Carver, Mary Bethune—we can certainl ysee something of the glory of God in their lives."

"We need to get into Christ's presence because (1) our horizons of life will be widened and we will get an etrenal point of view; (2) we will see ourselves as we really are because Christ is the perfect mirror, and (3) we cannot become our best selves without His help."

Father Scott said that there is no surer way to come into the presence of Christ than through the foru gospels and through dedicated and sincere prayer.

President Cites College Needs

Bennett Budget Is Up $51,000

GREENSBORO, N.C.—An operating budget of $667,415 for the academic year 1958-59 was approved by the executive committee of the Bennett College board of trustees at its annual meeting in New York last week.

This amount represents an increase of approximately $51,000 over the current budget.

The trustees heard an interim report made by President Willa B. Player in which she listed some of the long term building needs of the college. These include a health and physical education building, a residence hall, an infirmary, an administration-classroom building, a home management house and a small maintenance building for the housing of equipment.

IT WAS AGREED that the policy of holding Bennett's enrollment to 500 or less would be continued. Addition of a residence hall would serve to alleviate present overcrowding rather than to accommodate a larger student body, it was pointed out.

Dr. Player was authorized to be prepared to present plans for this building and for proposed group major medical insurance coverage for faculty and staff at the October meeting of the full board.

Bennett College

To Build $350,000 Dormitory

GREENSBORO, N. C.—Authorization for construction of a new residence hall at a cost of approximately $315,000 was voted last week by Bennett College trustees during their annual meeting at the college.

President Willa B. Player and Mrs. Julius W. Cone, of Greensboro, chairman of the buildings and grounds committee, were given authority to enter into negotiations with the Housing and Home Finance Agency of the Federal government for assistance. The new dormitory will house 106 students.

Dr. Frederick D. Patterson of New York City, board chairman, who presided, was requested to appoint at an early date a development committee to be composed of trustees, faculty, staff, students, graduates and members of the Greensboro community, to draft a program of long-range development for the college over a 10-year period.

Awards Made At Bennett Annual Honors Day Program

GREENSBORO, N. C.—The award of fellowships for graduate study to three Bennett College seniors was announced at the annual Honors Day program in Pfeiffer Chapel.

College Funds Stolen

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla.—Working fast and smoothly, burglars broke into the administration building at Bethune-Cookman College, smashed open a steel safe, and slipped away with about $8,404 in tuition receipts and war bonds.

Business manager Paul L. Hyde said at least $2,218 of the loot was cash. The balance included checks, money orders and non-negotiable bonds.

THOMAS FERRELL, the school's head maintenance man, discovered the theft. The intruders apparently entered the building, White Hall, through the unlocked front door. Moving down a short hallway, they jimmied open two doors and entered Hyde's private office. Nothing was found missing there. Then the thugs crossed the hall, ripped open the door of the business office and found the money.

Using a sledgehammer or some other heavy instrument, they knocked off the combination. Next they drilled a hole into the metal lock, fitted a bar into the opening, and knocked the mechanism loose.

Detective Sgt. Lee Mack speculated the job was done by professionals.

The school employs a night watchman, William Range, but he told officers he has over 12 buildings to check and it takes nearly an hour to visit the whole campus.

HYDE SAID about $3,493 of the loot was represented by students' tuition payments for the spring term. Had it been a week night the money would have been deposited in a night bank depository, he said. The burglary occurred on a Sunday night.

HER HONOR—The Hon. Jane M. Bolin, justice of the Domestic Relations Court of New York, was the principal speaker at the annual Bethune Foundation breakfast, sponsored by Beta Phi Omega Chapter of Alpha Chi Phi Omega Sorority and Fraternity, national cosmetology organization. Justice Bolin praised the 21-year-old, 100-chapter organization for having raised a total of $58,000 for Bethune-Cookman College. Also, on the dais, is Mrs. Lucille Roberts Shuler, president of the sponsoring chapter and founder-director of the 25-year-old La Roberts School of Beauty Culture in Brooklyn.—Monclova Photo.

Cash To Bennett College

GREENSBORO, N. C. — Cash gifts of approximately $22,000 were presented to Bennett College on Tuesday during its convocation on Christian Higher Education, held in Pfeiffer Chapel.

Norfolk Va.

The gifts represented contributions from three conferences of the Baltimore Area of the Methodist church. The North Carolina conference reported $9,749, an amount which is expected to reach over $10,000 when some late reports are received.

Dec 12-27-58

NEXT LARGEST gift was that of $7,250 from the Delaware conference. The Washington conference contribution was $4,782.

Bishop Edgar A. Love, resident bishop of the area, delivered the convocation address in which he made a plea for the exponents of Christian higher education to wage an unceasing fight against the "entrenched reactionaries who resist any change which seeks to recognize the equality of man under the Fatherhood of God."

Dr. Frederick D. Patterson, of New York City, chairman of the Bennett board of trustees, in thanking the various conferences for their gifts to the college said:

"PROBABLY no other country in the world equals America in its philanthropy. Instead of gifts from the privileged few, we are now witnses ing more giving by the masses of our population. Were this not true, our private colleges and universities would not be able to live up to the standards, what with the mounting costs of higher education."

President Willa B. Player, who presided, also expressed deep appreciation for the generosity of the Baltimore Area and called upon the district superintendents of the North Carolina Conference to introduce their ministerial and lay representatives who occupied a reserved section in the front of the chapel.

At the annual conference "roll call" in the morning, these superintendents reported approximately $10,000 raised for all conference claims during the year. Leading the list was the Greensboro district, the Rev. W. T. Brown, superintendent, with $13,026.50 followed closely by the Winston District, the Rev. L. A. Brown, superintendent, with $12,934.83.

The Laurinburg district, headed by the Rev. R. C. Sharpe, reported $6,577 and the Western district of the Rev. William Phillips reported $7,310.

Delaware College Dismisses Negro English Professor

DOVER, Del. (AP)—Dr. George Kent said Tuesday his dismissal from Delaware State College signifies an end of freedom of expression and thought for faculty members at the Negro school.

Kent, a Negro, was dismissed by the board of trustees April 19. He had been a professor at the college four years and was head of the English department.

"As I understand the charges against me," Kent said in a letter to the board requesting a hearing, "they are that I have been an active member of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, and that I have expressed my personal views as a citizen on some issues in letters to the editor."

The professor is a former president of the central branch of the NAACP in Delaware and he said he finds "it difficult to see anything unhealthy" about his membership in the organization.

The 10-member board of trustees has scheduled its next meeting for Friday. Boggs was not present at the April 19 meeting, but McDowell voted for the retention of Kent.

After four years at the college, a professor must be approved by six board members for continued tenure. Of eight members present at the recent meeting, the vote was 4-4. One of the two Negro members of the board voted for Kent, the other against.

Members opposed to Kent indicated his association with the NAACP made it difficult to get appropriations from the Delaware Legislature.

Kent said he had written one letter to the editor criticizing a restaurant for refusing service to K. A. Gbedemah, finance minister of Ghana.

Referring to this and to another letter, the professor said: "I am thus accused of exercising freedom of expression and of opposing injustice, acts supposedly an entrenched and valued part of our American heritage."

Kent said the dismissal means the "rights of the faculty as citizens of the community are abolished, all opinions expressed must meet approval of the board of trustees or be concealed, and students must not expect the faculty to exemplify Democratic ideals."

Professor Links Firing to NAACP

DOVER, Del., April 30 (AP).—Dr. George Kent, head of the English Department of Delaware State College, said yesterday he had been dismissed because of his affiliation with the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

A former president of the Central Branch of the NAACP in Delaware, Dr. Kent has been a professor at the college for Negroes for the last four years.

In a letter to the school board of trustees, the Negro professor has asked for a hearing. The board, meantime, has scheduled another meeting for next Friday.

After four years at the college, a professor must be approved by six of the 10-member board of trustees to be continued on tenure. At a meeting April 19, the eight members present split, 4-4, on Dr. Kent, which meant automatic dismissal. The two Negro members of the board split, 1-1, in the voting.

The professor admitted his NAACP membership, but said he finds "it difficult to see anything unhealthy" about such membership.

Fired Dean Rehired

NAACP work irked Delaware trustee board

By BAKER MORTEN
AFRO Staff Correspondent

DOVER, Del. — In what was tantamount to reinstatement Firday, Dr. George Kent, ousted dean of Delaware State College here, was given professorial tenure by the college board of trustees during an afternoon hearing in the matter.

The tenure-giving action relates to teaching assignments for Dr. Kent, who as dean, was without tenure. It also means, in effect, that he has been reinstated to the college,

DR. JEROME HOLLAND, president of Delaware State College, recommended the renewal of Dr. Kent's contract and the board authorized the president to issue Dr. Kent a one-year contract in the department of literature and languages.

Dr. Kent had earlier spoken out in letters to the editor concerning the Howard Johnson Restaurant's refusal to serve Finance Minister K. A. Gbedemah of Ghana.

after being dismissed two weeks earlier.

In an April 19 action that dismissed Dr. Kent, the board of trustees refused to place him on tenure. Dr. Kent's affiliation and activities in the NAACP were indicated as reasons tenure was refused him at that time.

Following his dismissal he charged he was ostracized because of his NAACP activities and the expression of his personal views on certain issues.

In a letter to each member of the board following his ouster, he listed several conclusions "that could be drawn from the board's action." They were:

1. That freedom of expression and thought for faculty members are abolished.
2. That the rights of the faculty as citizens of the community are abolished.
3. That all opinions expressed must meet the approval of the board of trustees.
4. That the students are not to expect the faculty to exemplify democratic ideals.
5. That a colored person must not oppose injustice; if he does he will lose his job.
6. That colored persons in general must conceal their opinions in the state of Delaware or they may be faced with the loss of jobs.
7. That colored persons must accept all conditions destructive to their honor, personalities and children or be dismissed.

In Friday's meeting, called by John N. McDowell, president of the board of trustees, Dr. Kent was given professorial tenure by a vote of 6-4. Ten members were present.

Fire 3 More College Profs

(By Courier Press Service)

A game of "IT taggers" between the administrations of four Negro colleges and certain faculty members moved into another week with the reinstatement of one "prof" and the ouster of three new ones.

Dr. George Kent of Delaware State College proved to be the week's most adept player.

He had been tagged "out" by the Delaware State College administration some two weeks ago, but a six to four vote of the school's board of trustees let him back in with a one year's contract.

Down in Mississippi, Clennon King, put out of the fun at Alcorn A. and M. College for a second and, what most folks think, the final time, cried from his pulpit in a Gulfport AME Church: "They know not that Clennon King's dismissal has not cured Alcorn of Uncle Toms. There are more Uncle Toms on that faculty now than ever."

THE MOST ROUSING GAMES are being played now at Benedict College in Columbia, S. C., where it seems that Gov. George Bell Timmerman has the ability to "tag" more people "out" than any other Dixie executive.

"Tagged" with dismissals at Benedict were three white profs, including Dr. Lewis Smith, head of the humanities division and a professor of English, Dr. J. Spencer Kennard, a Baptist minister and a history professor; and Mrs. Marian Davis, an English instructor. This trio was reportedly ousted after a phone call ensued between the Governor and Benedict's white board chairman, B. M. Edwards.

Mr. Edwards, along with the Revs. R. Archie Ellis and Paul Wheeler, both white members of the board, spearheaded the ouster move. Edwards, president of the South Carolina National Bank and an owner of stock in the Seaboard Airline Railroad, drew the fire of Modjeska M. Simkins, a prominent Columbia citizen.

Mrs. Simkins accused Mr. Edwards of having been one of the signers of a 1956 resolution of the South Carolina White Citizens Councils which defied the U. S. Supreme Court for its desegregation decisions.

Dr. Smith, one of the dismissed professors, asserted: "The sad fact is that the college has passed out of the hands of the Negro people and is now being run for Governor Timmerman's office." According to Mrs. Simkins, the ouster of the three "profs" came after the Governor threatened the school with de-certification.

ACROSS THE STREET from Benedict sits Allen U., where

Dr. Forrest O. Wiggins, and two white professors, Dr. John G. Rideout and Dr. Edwin D. Hoffman, have been put out of their jobs in similar cases. In the case of these six Columbia 'profs," their espousal of integration causes has been the forerunner of their ousters.

Prof Facing Ouster Wins Job Tenure After Fight

DOVER, Del. — (INS) — Delaware State college trustees have voted to grant professorial tenure to Dr. George Kent, who has been criticized in some quarters for his activities on benalf of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

At a special meeting, the board by a vote of six to four also authorized the college president to offer Dr. Kent the customary one-year contract as dean of the college and head of the department of literature and languages.

At a board meeting two weeks ago, tenure was denied when eight of the 10 members present voted four to four. Six votes are required under college rules to grant tenure to a staff member who has served at least four years.

Dr. Jerome H. Holland, college president, recommended that tenure be granted. Dr. Kent at one time served as president of the Central Delaware Branch of the NAACP.

It was reported earlier that some trustees from southern Delaware objected to Dr. Kent's activities and to letters mailed by him to newspapers. Dr. Kent charged in reply that his freedom of expression was under attack.

One member of the board had intimated that Dr. Kent's activity in outside organizations and his public stand on issues had made it difficult to get appropriations for the college.

But Dr. Kent stated in a letter to the trustees, "As I understand the charges against me, they are that I have been an active member of the NAACP, and that I have expressed my personal views as a citizen on some issues in letters to the editor.

"I am, in fact, a member of the NAACP, an organization praised by J. Edgar Hoover of the FBI for its opposition to Communism. I find it difficult to see anything unhealthy in the fact." He points out that Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Senator Herbert Lehman of New York and Dr. Ralph Bunche were also members of the organization.

Speaking of the letters he had written, he said, "I presume two letters are in question."

One, he said, was the letter concerning a local restaurant's refusal to serve Finance Minister K. A. Gbedemah of Ghana and the other opposing an arraigning magistrate's presumed guilt of two men before trial.

"I am thus accused of exercising freedom of expression and of opposing injustice, acts supposedly an entrenched and valued part of our American heritage.

"Since the members of the board have implied deep interest in the welfare of the college, I ask consideration of what my dismissal on such basis signifies for the faculty and the students and the Delaware community.

He then listed the following ten points:

1. That freedom of expression and freedom of thought for faculty members are abolished.

2. That the rights of the faculty as citizens of the community are abolished.

3. That all opinions expressed must meet the approval of the board of trustees, individually and collectively, or be concealed.

4. That the students are not to expect the faculty to exemplify democratic ideals.

5. That a Negro must not oppose injustice: if he does, he will lose his job.

6. That Negroes, in general, must conceal their opinions in the State of Delaware, or they may be faced with the loss of jobs.

7. That Negroes must accept all conditions destructive to their honor, their personalities, and to their children, or be dismissed.

8. That the role of the Administration of the college is in doubt (this is an apparent reference to the fact that renewal of Dr. Kent's contract was recommended by Dr. Jerome Holland, president of the institution.)

9. That the statement on academic freedom approved by the Board of Trustees of Delaware State College is without strength, and

10. That the continued accreditation of the college will be endangered.

"Under such conditions," Dr. Kent said, "the college cannot expect to obtain or retain faculty members worthy of their hire.

"However," he concluded, "it is my firm belief that out of any misunderstandings can come a higher achievement.

Congregational Churches To Give Flint $100,000

BOTSON -- An appropriation of $100,000 was voted today by the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Christian Churches, to complete a fund of $500.00 raised by the Negro and white citizens of New Orleans, Louisiana, for the Flint-Goodridge Hospital in that city.

The $500,000 fund will be matched by the Federal Government to finance a $1,000,000 expansion program.

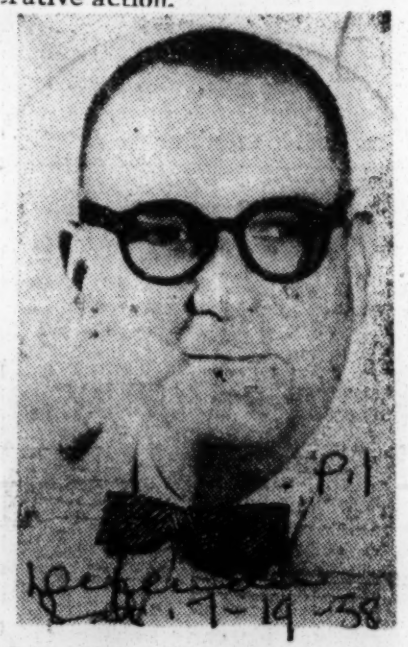
The Flint-Goodridge Hospital an adjunct of Dillard University, has one of the finest graduate nurse training programs in the country. It completes nursing education of Negroes who have a college degree. This is the only first-class hospital in a large area where Negro physicians are permitted to bring and attend patients.

Working side by side, the Negro and white citizens of New Orleans have contributed approximately equal amounts toward the completion of the project.

Announcing the $100,000 appropriation by the Congregational Christian Churches, Rev. Dr. Truman B. Douglass, New York City, executive vice president of the Board of Home Missions, said:

"This assuring of a million dollar expansion program for an institution as strategically situated and as indispensable as Flint-Goodridge Hospital is another example of the effectiveness of well-timed cooperative action by religious organizations to accomplish results of decisive importance in our society. In a time of racial tension the enlightened white and Negro citizens of New Orleans have found special satisfaction and significance in their mutual devotion and success in a common cause of such importance."

The appropriation to the hospital, according to Dr. Douglass, continues an historic emphasis and policy of the Board of Home Missions. "Out of an annual budget in excess of $3,000,000," he said, "approximately one-third is expended for the improvement of intercultural relations in the United States and its possessions, and for the higher education of members of minority groups. This is believed to be the largest annual investment of any church body in these enterprises of common action in the interest of inter-racial cooperative action."



DR. JOHN S. SMITH has been appointed as dean of instruction at Dillard university, New Orleans, La. Dr. Smith has served previously as dean of Bethune - Cookman college and Iowa Wesleyan college and as assistant to the president of Washington college. He received his doctorate at Drew university.

RALEIGH OFFICES GIVEN APPROVAL BY METHODISTS

College Finance Action Is Taken at Wilson; Adjourning Today

By JANE HALL

WILSON — Unanimous approval of a headquarters at Raleigh was voiced here Wednesday night by the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Church.

A resolution asking the boards of trustees of Greensboro, High Point and Louisburg Colleges and Duke University to admit qualified students regardless of race or color was offered.

The Rev. Harmon Smith of Burlington had submitted the resolution as an amendment to the report of the Board of Social and Economic Relations.

Delegates voted 119 to 60 against referring the amendment to the board for further study to bring further consideration of the proposal.

The Rev. Mr. Smith prefaced the introduction of the resolution with the observation that qualified Negro students now are being admitted to the University of North Carolina, Woman's College and North Carolina State College.

Delegates reduced recommendations of $45,000 each to the proposed colleges at Fayetteville and Rocky Mount to $36,750 and made partial restoration of cuts to allocations for High Point and Greensboro Colleges.

High Point College's fund was increased from $18,000 to $27,000 and Greensboro College's allocation from $15,000 to $22,500.

Delegates, reiterating their 1957 plea for statewide support of Methodist educational institutions, made another overture to the Western North Carolina Conference expressing the hope for support of the proposed colleges.

A plan for financing the Raleigh headquarters to be located on the campus of the Methodist Home for Children was approved in the afternoon.

Adjournment will come at noon Thursday when Bishop Paul N. Garber of the Richmond Area reads appointments.

With two invitations before them—from Grace Church in Wilmington and First Church in Rocky Mount—Methodists of the North Carolina Conference accepted the invitation of the Wilmington Church as the site of the 1959 annual conference.

The delegates adopted a budget for 1958-59 totaling $1,546,547 presented by the commission on world service and finance. Apportionments amount to $502,732 (for such things as the Episcopal Fund, Conference Pension Funds and the like) and benevolences amount to $1,043,815, for World Service, general administration and the like.

Methodist Fund

Delegates also stamped their approval on the report of the Methodist Fund, Inc., an agency charged with the investment of the permanent funds of the Conference and its agencies. According to the report, investments currently are yielding at the rate of 4.66 per cent income and additional irregular income in the form of stock dividends has offset substantially all expenses of the fund.

Agency members of the fund will receive a shareholder's dividend of 4.5 per cent per share on July 23.

Defeated

In a protracted discussion—marked by substitute amendments, tie votes, and other parliamentary doings—the delegates turned down the portion of the report of the Board of Pensions which proposed the establishment of a new group life insurance program for ministers. The final vote was 96 for the plan, 124 against it.

The proposed use of the Conference Claimants Fund (for retired ministers) to finance, in part, the new plan (for active ministers) was the principal reason for the plan's defeat. A few of the delegates also questioned the plan's legality with regard to the Discipline.

During the anniversary of the Board of Temperance, led by President D. W. Charlton, delegates accepted the board's report. In its report, the Board of Temperance said, in part:

"We denounce the aggressive invasion of the American home by liquor advertisers, who seek to induce even our children to use alcoholic beverages through every modern media. Following a glamorous television program, a child was recently heard crying for beer.

"Again, we appeal for continued support of congressional legislation to ban the interstate transportation of alcoholic beverage advertising materiols, specifically Langer Bill S. 582 and the Siler Bill H. R. 4833."

Despite their concern with business matters, the Methodists took time out of their busy day to think about and consider other important aspects of their Conference life.

During the afternoon, Bishop Garber conducted the solemn service of ordination for the consecration of ministers of music, directors of Christian education, deaconesses, and the ordination of deacons and elders. Bishop W. W. Peele of Laurinburg, now retired but long a beloved figure in the Conference, delivered the message at the service.

Immediately following, the always poignant memorial service was held honoring those ministers and ministers' wives who have died during the year. The Rev. J. Furman Herbert gave the memorial address.

At the Wednesday night session, the anniversary of the Board of Lay Activities was observed. An address by A. G. Jefferson, lay leader of the Virginia Conference, highlighted the observance. J. Nelson Gibson Jr., lay leader of the North Carolina Conference, presided.

Duke trustees urged to drop seminary race bans

LAKE JUNALUSKA, N.C. — The Western North Carolina Methodist Conference went on record here last week as favoring admission of colored students to the Duke University Divinity School and lashed out at the Ku Klu Klan as often cloaking "much black hatred under its white robe."

The Duke resolution, adopted by a 91-46 vote, was addressed to the Methodist school's board of trustees and urged restudy of the university's racially-restricted admissions policy. It marked acceptance by the conference of a petition submitted by the faculty and students of the school calling for admission of properly qualified persons without regard to race.

The anti-Klan resolution marked acceptance of the conference board of social and economic relations report which urged "study and exposure of this group masquerading, more often than not, under the name of Christ, burning the symbol of faith while marching in cadence to religious songs."

EDWARD WATERS COLLEGE

Court Denies Dismissal of School Case

Circuit Court Judge Bayard B. Shields yesterday denied motions by three defendants to dismiss a case brought before Jacksonville attorney challenging the right of the city to contribute funds to non-governmental schools.

The suit was brought last fall by J. L. Lee against the city. Lee challenges the constitutionality of special legislative acts permitting the city to contribute $25,000 annually each to Jacksonville [illegible] and Edward Waters [illegible] schools have interjoined as defendants with the city.

After the hearing Judge Shields gave the city, represented yesterday by Ingram P. Cratchfield; Jacksonville University, represented by Earl B. Hadlow, and Edward Waters College 15 days to submit final answers to Lee's complaint. Releford McGriff, attorney for Edward Waters College, was unable to attend the hearing.

William Bostwick, associated with Lee in the suit, said the Legislature was wrong in its interpretation of the Constitution in passing the special acts.

A question was raised asking if the schools should answer whether or not they "secured" passage of the special acts. Hadlow argued that the question "could not be answered" and was immaterial to the injunction suit.

Remarking on a case cited by Bostwick as an example, Judge Shields observed that the fact that some persons make efforts to get an act passed for their benefit does not make the act unconstitutional as long as no fraud is alleged.

Dr. S. D. Williams Stepping Down At Elizabeth City TC

By TAYLOR S. JACKSON

ELIZABETH CITY, N. C. — After 28 years of service as dean and president of the Elizabeth City State Teachers college, Dr. S. D. Williams is retiring as the head of the institution. Students, faculty members, alumni and friends assembled for the 1958 commencement exercises were shocked to hear for the first time that the man who had done so much to make the Elizabeth City State Teachers college an outstanding college had decided to lay down his mantle.

Dr. Williams came to the college in 1930 to serve as dean a post he held for 15 years. His loyalty and cooperation to the institution and general efficiency were responsible for his selection as the fourth president in 1955.

DURING HIS administration the institution has grown to be one of the most effective schools in the country designed for the training of elementary school teachers. A great contribution as dean was the reorganization of the curriculum of the college. His plan to guide students in the areas of personal,, social and economic growth in the preparation for teaching and good citizenship and the contribution to the general popular education. President Williams received national recognition for his efforts.

He began his administration as president by appealing to the trustees, members of the Budget Commission and the General Assembly for larger appropriations for the college. In response his thought provoking requests, the appropriations were eventually granted to transform the college into a first class institution.

UNDER THE administration of President Williams every building has been remodelled and put into first-class shape. The campus through the addition of roads, walks and shrubbery has now become a showplace of the town. In the past ten years two modern dormitories have been erected; a science hall, a physical education and fine arts building have been constructed; an up-to-date infirmary modern in its appointments and an athletic field have been added. In addition, four homes for faculty members have been provided.

The college has been accredited by the Southern Association of Colleges for Teachers Education and the American Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education. Graduates of the college are making excellent records in the leading graduate schools of the nation.

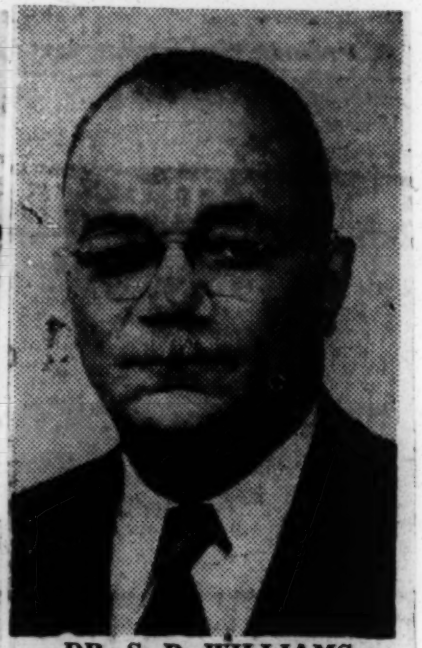
FOR MANY years, Pres. Williams saw the need of expanding the curriculum of the college in order to meet the needs of youth who did not wish to become teachers. As a result, during the past year courses have been added in commercial education, cosmetology, brickmasonry and electronics.

Pres. Williams' constant and increasing urging for improved instruction at the college, high school and elementary educational levels has become a source of inspiration to all teachers of the state. As the organizer of the Northeastern North Carolina Schoolmasters club, the oldest of the state, and as president of the North Carolina College conference and the North Carolina Teachers association, Dr. Williams has been a tremendous influence in shaping the lives of hundreds of teachers and principals of the state.

"MANY MONTHS were spent in making the decision to retire. It was not easy for I love this institution and all connected with it," said the president in talking with friends. His lovely wife who has been an inspiration to him through all of his years of service, shares his feeling in leaving the institution which has been their heart for the 28 years. Mrs. Williams a teacher in the P. W. Moore high school until her retirement recently, has endeared herself to all who have known her.

It was Pres. Williams' desire to retire a year ago but he did not wish the new board to be appointed at that time to have the task of appointing a new president as soon as they entered upon their duties and, before they could become familiar with the affairs of the college. He also was concerned about the new program of education being initiated.



DR. S. D. WILLIAMS
Stepping Down

IT IS SIGNIFICANT that the board of trustees named him as a member of the committee to select the new president.

It is not generally known that President and Mrs. Williams contributed financial aid to many boys and girls who would have been denied an education otherwise. He is an elder in Antioch Presbyterian church here and has been active in the affairs of the community. Not only has he held memberships on many local civic committees, but he has served on many state boards and commission. In 1948, the Johnson C. Smith university of Charlotte confereed upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Education in recognition of his work as a leader in the education of youth.

Emory U Majority Favor Negro Entry

ATLANTA, Jan. 25 (AP) — More than three-fourths of the students in the Emory University school of theology favor admission of Negroes to the school, a student publication said today.

The student council polled the students and released the results in the Candler Advocate, student newsletter.

Replies received from 337 questionnaires circulated to 400 theology students at the Methodist school showed the following: those favoring admission of qualified Negroes as students 262, undecided 37, no 38. This was a slightly higher per cent than has been indicated by similar polls during the past five years.

A majority, 59.9 per cent, also indicated they would be willing to have a Negro as a dormitory roommate.

Candler School welcomes all

NASHVILLE (ANP) — About nine out of ten students at the [illegible] of Theology of Emory University, Atlanta, Ga., would welcome colored people as full participating members of the student body, according to a recent poll.

Candler is one of The Methodist Church's ten theological schools.

The poll, conducted by the school's student council, also indicated that 78 percent of the students would be willing to have colored people as members of their congregations and more than 80 percent would allow their children to attend integrated public schools.

THE POLL was conducted through a questionnaire in November, 1957, and the results published recently in The Candler Advocate, a fortnightly publication of the school.

Candler has a student body of about 400. Three-hundred forty-one questionnaires were circulated and 337 answered.

Emory Theologs Favor Integration

ATLANTA, GEORGIA — (SNS) Over three-fourths of the students in the Emory University School of Theology favor admission of Negroes to the school, according to a recent poll taken by the student council.

Results of the poll were released [illegible] Candler Advocate, student newsletter of the theology school.

The question was: Do you favor admission of qualified Negroes as students in the Candler School of Theology? Replies were received from 337 questionnaires circulated to 400 theology students, with the following break-down: yes, 262; undecided, 37; no, 38.

This is a slightly higher per cent than has been indicated by similar polls taken during the past five years in the theology school.

A majority (59.9) also indicated they would be willing to have a Negro as a dormitory roommate.

A more conservative response, however, was made to the question of abolition of the Central Jurisdiction (Negro) of the Methodist church. Replies lined up 124 against; 83, for; others, undecided. Asked whether they would be willing to have Negroes as members of their congregations, the ministerial students responded with: 35, no; 242, yes. In reply to a question on tergration, votes ran 183 to 73 in favor of integration.

Commenting on the poll, Walter M. Albritton, Jr., editor of the newsletter, wrote: "It would be interesting to know how the integration-minded preachers plan to transfer their opinions from the secret ballot to the parish. Need we be remined once again that the matter is not the either or proposition that many suppose it to be?"

DR. STEPHEN J. WRIGHT

As seventh president of Fisk, Dr. Wright succeeds the late Dr. Charles S. Johnson. Fisk, one of America's great liberal arts colleges, was founded in 1866 when three agents of the American Missionary Association laid the groundwork in cooperation with representatives of the Western Freed men's Aid Commission in Cincinnati and the Freedmen's Bureau of Tennessee.

The university was named in honor of General Clinton B. Fisk of the Freedmen's Bureau of Tennessee, one of the founders.

Fisk developed into a liberal arts college with a national reputation. In addition to early recognition by the New York State Board of Regents, it was the first predominately Negro institution to become fully approved by the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, the Association of American Universities and the American Association of University Women.

Fisk is also accredited by the National Association of Schools of Music and was the first predominately Negro college to be granted a charter by Phi Beta Kappa, national honor society.

The investiture of the president by Dr. Phillip M. Widenhouse, general secretary of the American Missionary Association and chairman of the Fisk Board of Trustees, was an impressive rite.

It signalled the beginning of another era in the history of the internationally known liberal arts college, now almost 100 years old.

A TOTAL OF 181 delegates to the inauguration marched in the colorful processional. One-hundred and fifty - seven represented colleges and universities from across the nation. The other 24 were from educational organizations of all types.

They were joined in the processional by a former governor of Tennessee, the mayor of Nashville, the Davidson County judge, trustees, the Fisk faculty, student and alumni representatives.

The delegates from colleges and universities and from educational organizations were presented to the inaugural audience by Dr. John Hope Franklin, head of the department of history at Brooklyn College and chairman of the Fisk Trustee Committee on Educational Policy.

THE TENNESSEE A. and I. State University Band provided music for the processional and recessional. The Fisk University Choir was heard in a musical selection.

The invocation was given by the Rev. Wilson Q. Welch, Fisk minister, and the benediction by Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard University.

Dr. Wright, former president of Bluefield State College, Bluefield, W. Va., assumed the Fisk presidency in July, 1957. He succeeded the late Dr. Charles S. Johnson.

A former high school teacher and principal, Dr. Wright entered the field of higher education in 1939 when he joined the faculty of North Carolina College at Durham.

BEFORE TAKING the president's chair at Bluefield, Dr. Wright was dean of the faculty at Hampton Institute. In his inaugural remarks, Saturday, he said:

"Higher education has become so important, both to the nation and to the individual that neither can afford the high cost of low quality education.

"For this reason, the future of Fisk can be justified solely on the basis of the excellence of its program, its ability to offer gifted young Americans, selected without regard to race, an education adequate for their time.

TO MEET the criterion of excellence we will need to limit our field of service to that which we can do superbly well.

"Our history, tradition and resources suggest that this field of service be limited primarily if not exclusively to a modern liberal arts college of the highest quality.

"A college which places its total emphasis upon the development of highly selected young men and women; a college which places the highest premium upon developing the ability to think;

A COLLEGE which in its program seeks to balance the eternal verities with content required to live creatively and constructively in a changing world;

"A college in which mediocrity in all its subtil forms is recognized and made uncomfortable; a college which seeks to help its students discover values to live by and basis for making the hard choices of life;

"A college which teaches its students that the kind of men and women they become , as important as what they learn;

A college which emphasizes the refinement of tastes; a college where the academic atmosphere the setting and site reflect its purpose; a college in which the teaching inspires and lifts horizons.

"A college which emphasizes the vision of the Fisk of the future will be a demanding task for those of us who are charged with the responsibility of transmitting to the succeeding generations a greater Fisk than was transmitted to us.

"We know it cannot be done with our present resources. The hard fact that confronts us is that education of high quality is costly. It cannot be found in a bargain basement.

"Unless we find additional financial support in the years ahead we will have no choice but to make peace with mediocrity."

Negro Colleges Need Re-Definition--Wright

NASHVILLE — (ANP)—Dr. Stephen J. Wright, in his inaugural address as seventh president of Fisk University Saturday, declared: "Colleges founded and developed primarily for Negroes have reached a turning point in their history. Both their justification and their purposes need redefinition and reaffirmation."

The former Bluefield State College (W. Va.) president assumed the mantle of leadership of Fisk last July, succeeding the late Dr. Charles S. Johnson. A former high school teacher and principal, Dr. Wright entered the higher education field in 1939 when he joined North Carolina College's faculty. Before assuming Bluefield's presidency, he was faculty dean at Hampton Institute.

LEADING EDUCATORS PRESENT

Speaking to 157 representatives from colleges and universities throughout the country, 36 of whom were presidents; 25 representatives from educational organizations of all types, plus state, city, county officials, trustees, the school faculty, student and alumni representatives, Dr. Wright said:

"This fact has a searching revevance for Fisk, because conditions which influence the founding and development of other private colleges for Negroes, influenced the founding and development of Fisk, and it is reasonable to assume therefore that conditions now influencing these colleges will also influence the future of Fisk.

"Higher education has become so important, both to the nation and individual, that neither can afford the high cost of low quality education. For this reason, the future of Fisk can be justified solely on the basis of the excellence of its program, its ability to offer gifted young Americans, selected without regard to race, and education adequate for their time.

"To meet the criterion of excellence, we will need to limit our field of service to that which we can do superbly well. Our history tradition and resources suggest that this field of service be limited primarily, if not exclusively, to a modern liberal arts college of the highest quality.

"A MODERN LIBERAL ARTS COLLEGE"

Such a college would, as Dr. Wright put it:

1. Give total emphasis upon development of highly selected students.
2. Place highest premium on developing ability to think.
3. Seeks to balance, in its program, eternal verities with content required to live creatively and constructively in a changing world.
4. Recognize and make mediocrity in all its subtle forms uncomfortable.
5. Help students discover values to live by and basis for making hard choices of life.
6. Teach students that what they become is as important as what they learn.
7. Emphasize refinement and tastes.
8. Provide academic atmosphere, setting and site to reflect its purpose.
9. Provide teaching that inspires and lifts horizons.

Fisk lends a hand to the U.S. Navy

Applications for this program, leading to a career in the naval service, are available from Dr. S. O. Roberts, University Testing Center, Park Hall, Room 314, Fisk University or from the nearest U.S. Navy Recruiting Station.

Dr. Roberts has been provided with specific information concerning the NROTC program and will furnish information bulletins to any interested student. The deadline date for receipt of all applications is Nov. 15, 1958, the Navy stated.

Male citizens of the U.S. between the ages of 17 and 21 are eligible to apply for the Navy College Aptitude Test. Persons attaining a qualifying score will be given the Navy's rigid midshipman physical examination next February. From the pool of qualified candidates remaining in competition, approximately 1,800 young men will be selected for appointment as midshipmen.

Fisk new sponsor to atomic program

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Fisk University has been named a sponsoring university of the Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies, Oak Ridge, Tenn.

The election of Fisk by the ORINS Council made the Nashville institution the 37th sponsoring university and the first predominately colored liberal arts college to gain this honor.

According to Dr. James R. Lawson, head of the Fisk physics department and now a member of the ORINS Council, this action provides Fisk with a direct link to the United States' atomic energy program.

"THE FACULTY and students of Fisk will now have an opportunity to participate in any phase of the atomic energy program in which they may be interested," Dr. Lawson said.

He explained that Fisk can now take advantage of special training programs which provide intensive courses in scientific areas related to atomic energy. In addition, he said, faculty members may join research teams at Oak Ridge to further their own specialties.

Dr. Lawson has already become associated with the molecular structure section of the physics division and will aid in research problems along with other scientists.

BECAUSE OF Fisk's election, students of the Nashville college will become eligible for summer jobs at Oak Ridge which will provide earnings as well as extremely valuable experience.

The Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies was chartered in 1946 to advise and assist in arranging education, research, and development programs in nuclear science and atomic energy.

Its purpose is also to stimulate and assist in the development of research programs and important methods of education and training in nuclear science; and to foster and encourage advancement of knowledge concerning nuclear science and technology and related programs.

EDITOR'S NOTE:

In the next issue of the Globe a full account will be given of Dr. Wright's interesting inaugural address in which he forecast a future for Fisk which will be a college that will serve students, without regard to race.

The university, he stated, will need additional funds for teacher's salaries to the amount of at least $100,000, of which $50,000 should be contributed by the Fisk Alumni. He was quite specific in outlining the part that students, faculty, alumni, and the president, himself must play in the future development of Fisk University. He took sharp issue with those who contend that all of the nations colleges will be needed and says that only the good colleges can hope to continue. He was specific, also in pleading for funds with which to modernize both Jubilee and Livingston Halls.

FISK UNIVERSITY
A Historical Sketch

The founding of Fisk University dates back to 1865, when John Ogden, the Reverend E. M. Cravath, and the Reverend E. P. Smith, agents of the American Missionary Association, New York City, and the Western Freedmen's Aid Commission, Cincinnati, sought to establish at Nashville a school for colored people of the South. They were assisted in this endeavor by General Clinton B. Fisk of the Freedmen's Bureau in Tennessee.

The institution opened on January 9, 1866, in quarters partly secured by General Fisk, and was named Fisk School in his honor. The first principal was John Ogden. With the signing of the charter of August 12, 1867, Fisk School became Fisk University, under the auspices of the American Missionary Association, with which the institution remains closely affiliated.

With the appointment of Adam K. Spence to succeed John Ogden as principal of the University in 1870, there was continued a constructive educational program for Fisk and plans were formulated which resulted in the removal of the school to its present site.

In 1876, Jubilee Hall was erected on the new campus in North Nashville. This achievement was made possible by the efforts of the original Jubilee Singers, students of the University who were trained and directed by Professor George L. White. The Singers traveled, during the years from 1871 to 1878, in the northern and eastern parts of the United States and in Europe, earning money for the college through their recitals.

It was these Singers who created the Fisk Tradition in art and music, an dit was they who introduced to the world the Spiritual as an American contribution to musical art.

In 1875, the Reverend E. M. Cravath became the first president of Fisk University, with Adam K. Spence as his executive assistant. Dr. Cravath and his associates laid great emphasis on ideals and high standards, and under this administration, lasting twenty-five years, the character of the University was formed.

Under President Jones the college raised its academic standards measurably, increased its facilities greatly through the erection of the University Library and the Chemistry building and made substantial strides in raising an endowment fund.

Charles Spurgeon Johnson became the sixth President of the University in the summer of 1947. Dr. Johnson had been actively associated with Fisk since 1928, as Director of the Department of Social Science. Through his many scholarly activities including the volume of significant research prosecuted under his direction, he had earned for the Department a nation-wide reputation.

Founded primarily for the purpose of providing for the colored people of the South the advantages of a Christian education, Fisk has attracted, during every period of its history, students from all sections of the nation and from many foreign countries. Although the oroginal charter of incorporation specified "The education and training of young men and women irrespective of color," subsequent state legislation made it mandatory for the institution to limit its student body to members of the Negro race. With the exception of the faculty, which has always been appointed regardless of race or color, and a limited number of special students, the spirit of the original charter has never been fully realized.

In view of recent court decisions affecting higher education in the South, Fisk, like an increasing number of institutions in the region, now extends it educational facilities, as originally conceived, to students of all races, colors, and creeds, either as exchange students or as regularly enrolled students on both the undergraduate and graduate levels.

Fisk came into being at a turning point in American history, and from the outset the institution has enjoyed consistent growth and development in keeping with the ideals basic to its founding. It has passed, successively, through the stages of grade school, high school, and normal school to those of college and university. With the achievement of regional and national accreditation, the institution discontinued all instruction in those units below the college level. In achieving its present rank, Fisk was greatly assisted by other educational and philanthropic agencies, in audition to substantial support from the American Missionary Association.

Today, Fisk has a national reputation as a liberal arts college of high standing. In addition to early recognition by the New York State Board of Regents, it was the first Negro institution to become fully approved by the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, the Association of American Universities, and the American Assoication of University Women.

In the Fall of 1952, Fisk was granted a charter for the establishment of a chapter of Phi Beta Kappa. Recognition by these regional and national agencies has assured Fisk a ranking position among foremost American colleges and universities.

The present value of the University Campus Property and Equipment is approximately $2,983,528. Gifts to the University over a period of years have provided an endowment of $5,831,333. The annual income from this fund is a major factor in meeting University expenses, but there is still a serious need for gifts which will enable the University to maintain its high standards of teaching and provide greater opportunities for its students.

In addition to early recognition by the New York State Board of Regents, Fisk University was the first predominately Negro institution to become fully approved by the Assoication of American Universities, the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, and the American Association of University women. Fisk was among the first group of predominately Negro institutions to win full Membership in the Southern Association aof Colleges and Secondary Schools.

When, in the Fall of 1952, Fisk was granted a charter for the establishment of a chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, it became the first predominately Negro college with a chapter of this national honor society.

For the schol year, 1957-'58, Fisk has an undergraduate enrollment of 746. A total of 45 graduate students are enrolled for the 1957-'58 school year. This represents a total of 791.

The educational program at Fisk is organized into two administrative units—the Basic College and the College of Higher Studies. The former is devoted to general education or that core of experiences which are essential to all for intelligent living in a democratic society .The latter constitutes in a diminishing degree the student's general education, but is concerned chiefly with specialized instruction and research on the advanced undergraduate and graduate levels.

Under Fisk's Plan for Early Admission, exceptioinally qualified students may enter the University after completing the 10th or 11th grade of high school. These students pursue a Basic College Program which offers many unique opportunity to get a liberal education of high quality and unusual breadth and at the same time save them in their progress toward a Bachelor's degree.

Some courses at Fisk University are taught through the medium of closed circuit television. This is an experimental plan aimed at determining the effectiveness of teaching via closed circuit television at a small liberal arts college.

The Fisk student population is distributed among several independent residental units, under the direction of a new acedemic officer, the Headmaster, who is assisted by a satff of academic counselors and tutors.

Eleven non-Negro students are en-

Enrolled at Fisk University are regular students. Eight are exchange students from colleges in California and Ohio .

The present value of University property and quipment is approximately $2.968.528. Gifts to Fisk over the years have provided an endowment fund of $5.831.333.

Two new buildings are now being constructed on the Fisk Campus. One, a men's dormitory, is expected to be completed shortly after the opening of school in September. The other, a student union and dining hall, w lilbreeayd aock vbgk ng hall, will be ready for occupancy around the beginning of the new year.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Members of the Elmer S. Imes Physics' Club at Fisk University will be gazing into space this school year.

But they won't be day-dreaming.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

The budding physicists are mapping plans to form a moon-watch team to track artificial satellites. When their sky watch begins, they will become a part of a giant international network of moon-watchers cooperating in the world-wide program of gathering data from outer space.

Sat. 11-22-58

ACCORDING TO Dr. James R. Lawson, head of the physics department at Fisk, club members will modify a radio receiver and use visual methods in their satellite plotting. The students will determine the approximate speed, height, distance and orbit of artificial satellites.

The information they obtain will be immediately forwarded to the Smithsonian Astrophysical observatory where it will be utilized with other data from growing numbers of moonwatchers.

The Imes Physics Club also plans to visit Redstone Arsenal in Huntsville, Ala., to get a first-hand look at the construction and testing of satellite-launching missiles.

Composed of 14 men and six women students, the physics club was named for the late Dr. Elmer S. Imes, who was head of the department at Fisk from 1930 until 1942.

Officers of the club are Joseph A. Johnson III of Nashville, president; Jerry Byrd of Greenville, S. C., vice president; Julia S. Moore of Smithtona, Pa., secretary; Robert Perkins of Nashville, treasurer.

Fisk's New President Calls For $2 Million Expansion

Says Additional $100,000 Needed in Annual Operating Income

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Dr. Stephen J. Wright, citing the "turning point" in the histories of Negro colleges, outlined his plans for the Fisk University of the future as he was formerly inaugurated as the seventh president of the Nashville institution.

Dr. Wright catalogued Fisk's needs into brackets of finance and scholarship.

• He asserted that one of Fisk's most pressing needs is "an addition $100,000 in annual operating income if we are to hold our best teachers or compete for other great teachers."

• With regard to the physical needs of the campus, Dr. Wright stated that the school needs $2,000,000 for the "modernization of Jubilee and Livingstone Halls, and the construction of an urgently needed auditorium and fine arts building."

With respect to the question of scholarship, Dr. Wright warned that the nation cannot afford "the high cost of low-quality education."

AS FOR FISK'S aims in this respect, he laid out the following points:

1. Increased emphasis upon a modern liberal arts curriculum.

2. Development of the ability to think.

3. Encouragement of creativity and the discouragement of mediocrity.

4. Renewed emphasis upon the refinement of individual

5. Maintenance of an academic atmosphere.

15th Annual Race Relations Institute To Begin June 30, On Fisk Campus

Fisk University will become the race relations capital of the world June 30th as the 15th annual Institute of Race Relations opens a two-week exploration of "Human Relations Challenge."

Under the auspices of the Race Relations Department of the American Missionary Association Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Christian Churches, with Fisk as a co-sponsor, the Institute will be conducted by such experts as Thurgood Marshall, chief legal counsel of the NAACP.

Some 140 business, religious labor and other professional leaders from 30 Northern and Southern states will exchange ideas and viewpoints to achieve the institute's purpose: to enlist leaders of local communities on the problems, processes and methods of implementing better intergroup relations.

Special delegations from Puerto Rican, Indian-American and Spanish-speaking groups will provide a wide dimension of analysis.

In defining the scope of the institute, Dr. Hermon Long, director of the AMA's Race Relations Department, said:

"This is an institute which deals with the crucial isues of racial and human relations in our national life. Beyond the daily events and the processes of social change, there are urgent questions of decision and action. At the base of this challenge to individuals and groups lie matters of ultimate commitment to religious, human, and democratic values. They are the final measures of the wisdom and justice with which we endow leadership and action."

Over the past 14 years, the Race Relations Institute has provided lay and professional community leaders the opportunity to develop new understandings of the major minority group situations. In the role of lecturers or consultants have been some of the worlds outstanding authorities in the field. Among them have been:

Gordon W. Allport, Department of Social Relations, Harvard University; Lester Granger, Executive Director, National Urban League; Phillip M. Hauser, Chairman, Department of Sociology, University of Chicago; Lillian Smith; Author and Lecturer; Robert C. Weaver, State Administrator, State of New York, and P. L. Prattis, Executive Editor, Pittsburg Courier.

These and other authorities have led institute delegates in finding answers to problems imbedded in such areas as "The Scientific Acessment of Prejudice," "Sociological and Anthropological Backgrounds of Human Relations," "Fair Employment and Equal Economic Opportunity," "Housing," "Integration on College Campuses," "Church and Race," "Successful Practices of School Communities and "Legal and Legislative Approaches."

Institute members may earn three hours of academic credit toward undergraduate or graduate degrees.

Name Fisk University To Oak Ridge Atomic Program

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Fisk University has been named a sponsoring university of the Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies in Oak Ridge, Tennessee.

The election of Fisk by the ORINS Council made the Nashville institution the 37th sponsoring university and the first predominately Negro liberal arts college to gain this honor.

According to Dr. James R. Lawson, Head of the Fisk physics department and now a member of the ORINS Council, this action provides Fisk with a direct link to the United States' atomic energy program.

"The faculty and students of Fisk will now have an opportunity to participate in any phase of the atomic program in which they may be interested," Dr. Lawson said.

INTENSIVE COURSE

He explained that Fisk can now take advantage of special training programs which provide intensive courses in scientific areas related to atomic energy. In addition, he said, faculty members may join research teams at Oak Ridge to further their own specialties.

Dr. Lawson has already become associated with the molecular structure section of the physics division and will aid in research problems along with other scientists.

Because of Fisk's election, students of the Nashville college will become eligible for summer jobs at Oak Ridge which will provide earnings as well as extremely valuable experience.

The Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies was chartered in 1946 to advise and assist in arranging education, research, and development programs in nuclear science and atomic energy; to stimulate and assist in the development of research programs and important methods of education and training in nuclear science; and to foster and encourage advancement of knowledge concerning nuclear science and technology and related programs.

APPLIED RESEARCH

The Oak Ridge Research Participation Program enables selected university faculty members to participate in pure or applied research at Oak Ridge laboratories.

The scientific personnel and specialized equipment at Oak Ridge represent a combination not ordinarily available to a single university — but the availability of both to research participants provides unique opportunities in research and development.

This arrangement between the Institute and the Atomic Energy Commission's Oak Ridge laboratories, under which the universities contribute the manpower resources of their science faculties to Commission programs at Oak Ridge and receive in turn a commensurate enrichment of their own research and teaching activities, has been of extreme importance to the progress of nuclear energy research and development, not only in the South, but in the entire nation.

Alumni Observance Oct. 6

Noonday Prayer to Mar Fisk Singers' Tour Start

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Fisk University alumni all over the world will synchronize their watches Monday, Oct. 6, and at exactly noon (Nashville time) will pause to speak the noonday prayer in observance of Jubilee Day.

As they pray, they will be in unison with students and staff members who will be assembled in Fisk Memorial Chapel for the formal observance of the 87th anniversary of the departure of the Fisk Jubilee Singers on their triumphant tour of America and Europe.

The Rev. M. Bartlett Cochran, priest-in-charge of St. Margaret's Episcopal Church, Dayton, Ohio, and a member of the class of 1932, will deliver the Jubilee Day address. He will be introduced by his daughter, Janeice, a junior at Fisk.

THE ANNUAL Jubilee Day observance pays tribute to the original Fisk Jubilee Singers who introduced the Negro spiritual to the world on their celebrated tour which netted the university $150,000.

The funds raised by the singers were used to build historic Jubilee Hall, the first building ever erected with money raised by Negroes themselves.

Jubilee Day will also kick off the alumni fund drive which has a goal of a contribution from every one of the more than 4,000 Fisk graduates. The campaign ends in 1959.

Says Russians Very Much Like Americans

India's Veep at Fisk U.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—The Vice President of India, Dr. Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan, urged America to "speed up" desegregation although "it is clear to us that you here are trying to effect some kind of harmony among the races."

In Nashville to visit Fisk University and to address a Fisk student convocation, Dr. Radhakrishnan, a world-renowned philosopher and a former ambassador to Russia, told newsmen that the desegregation of public schools in America is winning friends for this country in Africa and Asia.

Courier P. 11
Sat. 4-19-58
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Winding up a state tour of the U.S., during which he conferred with President Eisenhower, Vice President Nixon and other top officials, Dr. Radhakrishnan called for a change of heart in order to meet the problems of the nuclear age.

REFERRING to the unsettled state of world affairs, Radhakrishnan said:

"It is not an economical or intellectual crisis but the difficulties are in the minds and hearts of men rather than in external environment. The obstacle to the establishment of a family on earth is a blight in the human heart."

He listed three basic needs which must be fulfilled before a regeneration of the world could be effected:

1. Attainment of the unfinished movement for national independence everywhere.
2. Racial harmony.
3. Aid to underprivileged countries.

The Oxford-educated philosopher, educator and statesman, speaking fluently and eloquently with an Oxford accent, told newsmen at the Nashville airport that the U. S. would do well to listen to Soviet proposals for ending the nuclear tests.

"I do not know whether it is sincere or propaganda," he said, "but why should we not try and go ahead with it? If it is sincere it might be effective. If it is propaganda this will show and it will fall through and can be called off."

HE SAID the Russians are very much like the Americans.

"Go to Russia. You will see much of what you see and feel here—divorces, marriages, stability, instability, sorrow and joy."

Dr. Stephen J. Wright, president of Fish University, met the Vice President at the airport and officially welcomed him to Nashville and to Fisk.

Citizens of Nashville caught a glimpse of India's Vice President as his motorcade, under heavy police escort, sped back and forth between the airport and the Fisk campus.

During his visit, the Mayor and Governor honored him by making him an honorary citizen of the City of Nashville and the State of Tennessee.

Fisk U. Hosts Indian Diplomat

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Dr. Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan, vice-president of the Republic of India, concluded his state visit to this country with a two-day stay here last week as the guest of Fisk university.

The philosopher and statesman delivered an address at a special university convocation in the Fisk Memorial chapel Monday. He arrived at Berry Field Easter Sunday morning.

The distinguished Dr. Radhakrishnan, who was India's ambassador to the Soviet Union from 1949 to 1952, has been in the United States since March 17. Following numerous meetings with American officials including the President, Vice-President and the Secretary of State, he embarked on a tour of the United States.

During his Fisk university visit, Dr. Radhakrishnan spent about four hours as guest of Chancellor Harvey Branscombe of Vanderbilt university. He met with Indian students from all Nashville colleges and universities and was the guest of honor at a reception Sunday night at the Fisk university Faculty Club.

Dr. Radhakrishnan is widely known as a philosopher and educator, through his achievements in the political field have also been many. He was a member of the Constituent Assembly and made a significant contributition to the drafting of India's Constitution.

As a philosopher, he has been honored as much abroad as in his own country. He has held professorships in philosophy at the Madras, Mysore and Calcutta Universities. He has also been the Vice-Chancellor of the Andhra and Banaras Universities. He was appointed as Spalding Professor of Eastern Religion and Ethics at Oxford university, England, from 1936 until the outbreak of World War II.

The Vice-President of India visited the United States in 1926 and delivered the Haskell lectures on Comparative Religion at the University of Chicago. He was a U. S. visitor again in 1948 under the auspices of the Watumull Foundation and lectured at 14 universities.

A distinguished writer, his best known work is "Indian Philosophy," published in two volumes He has had the unique honor of being interpreted by other philosophers and thinkers in his own lifetime. On his 60th birthday, he was presented with collection of essays on his work and influence by several writers of international standing.

These were published in London in 1951 under the title, "Radhakrishnan: Comparative Studies in Philosophy."

New 'First Lady' Of Fisk University Likes Young People, Collects Recipes

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The new "first lady" of Fisk university is, by her own admission, a school teacher at heart."

Mrs. Rosalind Wright, whose husband, Dr. Stephen J. Wright, was inaugurated Saturday, April 26, as the seventh president of Fisk university, is no longer a school marm. She is, however, no farther removed from young people to whom she has already devoted almost 20 years of her life.

"I enjoy young people so," she said. "I have worked with them all my life. Even though I am no longer in the classroom, I am delighted and honored that I will continue to be in a position to help them reach their dreams and ambitions.

"Seeing students as they come on campus at the beginning of a school year is like watching a light flash on in a dark room. They bring so much enthusiasm and brightness and hope."

Housewife's Apron Becoming

The president's wife, warm and vibrant, is an attractive woman who accepts with relish her challenging role as helpmate to the chief executive of one of America's great liberal arts colleges. And despite her love of the classroom, she wears the housewife's apron with ease.

Mrs. Wright has two deep interests which complement her enthusiasm for home-making. She is an ardent gardener and a zealous collector of recipes.

"It's taken me 20 years to develop my recipe collection," she said. "I guess I must have almost 2,500 in all."

Unlike many recipe collectors, Mrs. Wright makes good use of hers. Much of her time is spent in the kitchen and "when I run across a really unusual recipe, I just can't wait to try it out."

She thinks she reaches her peak with lemon pies. But, according to friends, she is a genius with hot rolls. As for Dr. Wright, "he likes just about everything I cook, but his favorite is walnut pound cake which I keep on hand for lunch."

Mrs. Wright finds gardening peaceful and relaxing. Flowers are her forte, with roses on top of her floral hit parade.

She is the "lady of the house" to her husband, her mother, Mrs. Emily Person, and Rusty.

Rusty, who deserves much more than this one paragraph, is the Wright's Doberman pinscher who has wagged his way into the hearts of his owners. Quite an actor, with dozens of tricks up his sleeve, Rusty bites a considerable chunk of time from Mrs. Wright's crammed schedule.

Just Like A Son

The Wright household is also home to Lt. Robert Smith of Fort Dix, N. J., Dr. Wright's nephew who is "just like a son to us."

The gracious First Lady of Fisk is a native of Franklinton, N. C. She is a Shaw graduate and holds the M.A. degree from New York university. A Delta, she is active as a member of the American Association of University Women and the Links.

She thinks Fisk and Nashville are "wonderful".

"We were overwhelmed by the reception given us when we arrived on campus," she said. "Fisk is a delightful place."

Though she gained some experience in the role of a campus first lady while her husband was President of Bluefield State College, Mrs. Wright is eagerly looking forward to the years that stretch out ahead.

"We've been here since July and most of that time has been spent getting adjusted," she declared. "But now that my husband has been officially inaugurated, we feel pretty much like "home folks." We welcome the great opportunities and challenges that await us."

Negro Colleges At Turning Point In History, Says New Fisk Prexy

Dr. Stephen Wright Inaugurated As Seventh President

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Dr Stephen J. Wright was inaugurated as the seventh president of Fisk university here Saturday, April 26, and in his inaugural address said that colleges founded primarily for Negroes have reached a turning point in their history.

Thirty-six college presidents were among the hundreds of persons who witnessed the inauguration which signalled the beginning of another era in the history of the internationally known liberal arts college, now almost 100 years old.

Dr. Wright, former president of the Bluefield State college in West Virgina, assumed the mantle of leadership of Fisk last July, succeeding the late Dr. Charles S. Johnson. A former high school teacher-principal, Dr. Wright entered the higher education field in 1939 when he joined North Carolina college's faculty. Before becoming Bluefield's president, he was faculty dean at Hampton institute.

A total of 181 delegates to the inauguration marched in the colorful processional. One-hundred and fifty-seven represented colleges and universities from across the nation. The other 24 were from educational organizations of all types.

They were joined in the processional by a former governor of Tennessee, the mayor of Nashville, the Davidson county judge, trustees, the Fisk faculty, student and alumni representatives.

Greetings to Fisk's new president came from Jim Nance McCord, former governor of Tennessee, representing the present governor, Frank Clement; Mayor Beverly Briley, Mrs. William F. Gibbs for the trustees committee on educational policy.

The Tennessee A and I State university band provided music for the processional and recessional.

The Fisk university choir was heard in a musical selection.

The invocation was given by the Rev. Wilson Q. Welch, Fisk minister, and the benediction by Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard university.

The impressive rites, inducting the new president, were conducted by Dr. Phillip M. Widenhouse, general secretary, American Missionary association and chairman of the Fisk board of trustees.

Fisk's New President

Defender P.1C

In his inaugural address, President Stephen Wright of Fisk University warned that colleges which were founded and developed primarily for Negroes "have reached a turning point in their history. Both their justification and their purposes need redefinition or reaffirmation."

The new President peered into the future of Fisk, in particular, and came up with a rather gloomy prophecy. Unless additional financial support is made available to the institution, he said, "we will have no choice but to make peace with mediocrity."

The future of Fisk, he commented, can be justified solely on the basis of the excellence of its program, its ability to offer gifted young Americans, selected without regard to race, an education adequate for their time.

Chicago Ill.

Dr. Wright confessed that the present resources of Fisk University were too inadequate to meet this criterion of excellence. "The hard fact that confronts us is that education of high quality is costly." And he added whimsically that such an education cannot be found in a "bargain basement."

However, he made his most potent and penetrating observation when he counseled his academic community to limit its field of service to that which it can discharge at the highest level of performance, and that this field of service should concern itself primarily, if not exclusively, with a modern liberal Arts college of unexcelled quality.

This type of educational statesmanship has been sorely needed. It is well that it comes at a critical moment when Negro colleges must come to grips with the cold realities of a changing social order. We must face the brutal fact that integration if, it is to achieve its noble ends, must ultimately swallow up the Negro colleges in the great unfolding of a functioning democracy. Not only must the Negro label be removed, but the content of the academic offerings must undergo a rigorous process of refinement and reorientation. In this new era, competitions will be sharp and exacting.

There will be no basis for "reaffirmation" of old values and obsolescent identities. To insist on integration while clinging steadfastly to a narrow concept that makes race a primary measure of consideration, would be an irritating contradiction.

Unless Negro colleges prepare themselves for the most drastic transition in their organic history, they shall soon outlive their usefulness as dispensers of disciplined knowledge. There is, at this juncture, too much sterility in our institutions for higher learning, and not enough productive and sound scholarship.

Dr. Wright's diagnosis is not only correct, but brilliant and courageous. His warnings should be reverently heeded by all who believe in the promotion of learning as the best means of insuring the survival of civilization, and as the safest road in the quest for Nirvana.

We wish President Wright well in his new and difficult, and, we hope—rewarding tasks.

Governor Sends Greetings

Greetings to Dr. Wright on his great day came from Gov. Frank Clement, through his representative, ex-Gov. Jim Nance McCord; Mayor Ben West of Nashville, Judge Beverly Briley and others.

Delivering his inaugural, Dr. Wright said that colleges developed primarily for Negroes must justify their existence because:

(1) "separate but equal" in public education has become increasingly recognized as contradictory terms.

(2) the movement toward desegregation is slowly gaining momentum.

(3) financial support is running behind essential operating costs.

(4) student bodies cannot assume an equitable share of the rising costs.

(5) alumni are contributing only modest support because they are small in number and far from wealthy.

(6) the state-supported college for Negroes has enjoyed a phenomenal growth in size, quality and prestige.

(7) the migration of Negroes to the North and West has reached enormous proportions and

(8) the climate of opinion toward the admission of Negro students to the colleges of the North and West.

"These developments," he continued "have a searching relevance for Fisk university because the conditions which influenced the founding and development of the other private colleges for Negroes, influenced the founding and development of Fisk, and it is reasonable to assume, therefore, that the conditions which are now influencing these colleges will also influence the future of Fisk university.

"Higher education has become so important, both to the nation and to the individual who would enjoy the blessings of this great country, that neither can afford the high cost of low quality education. For this reason, the future of Fisk university can be justified solely on the excellence of its program, its Americans, selected without regard to race, an education adequate for THEIR time.

"To meet the criterion of excellence, we will need to limit our field of service to that which we can do superbly well. Our history, tradition and resources suggest that this field of service be limited primarily, if not exclusively, to a modern liberal arts college of the highest quality — a college which places its total emphasis upon the development of highly selected young men and women; a college which places the highest premium upon developing the ability to think; a college which, in its program, seeks to balance the eternal verities with the content required to live creatively and constructively in a changing world; a college in which mediocrity, in all its subtle forms, is recognized and made uncomfortable; a college which seeks to help its students discover values to live by and bases for making the hard choices of life; a college which teaches its students that the kind of men and women they become is as important as what they learn; a college which emphasizes the refinement of tastes; a college where the academic atmosphere, the setting and the site reflect its purpose; a college in which the teaching inspires and lifts horizons.

"To translate into reality the vision of the Fisk of the future will be a demanding task for those of us who are charged with the responsibility of transmitting to the succeeding generations a greater Fisk than was transmitted to us.

"We know it cannot be done with our present resources. The hard fact that confronts us is that education of high quality is costly. It cannot be found in a bargain basement. Unless we find additional financial support in the years ahead, we will have no choice but to make peace with mediocrity.

"To translate the vision of the site and setting into reality for Fisk will cost approximately $2 million and would include the needed modernization of Jubilee and Livingston halls and the construction of an urgently needed auditorium and fine arts building.

"Fisk must have an additional $100,000 in annual operating income to hold our best teachers, to compete for more great teachers and to provide the finest in educational equipment."

FISK UNIVERSITY

Fisk Seizes a Fresh Opportunity

Journalist Studie

BY JAMES BARTY

An interview with Dr. Stephen J. Wright, president of Fisk university, which was admitted into membership in the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools in December.

Q. Fisk was in the first group of Negro schools — 15 senior colleges and three junior colleges — admitted into membership in the Southern association. What is the significance of this venture?

A. These 18 were among 33 Negro schools previously accredited by the association, but were admitted into official membership December 5. This step will enable white and Negro educators to share ideas increasingly at a time when communication between the races is decreasing in many realms.

Q. In what ways will communication be extended?

A. Officials of Negro schools now can attend association meetings at which research papers are discussed. They can take part in discussions of studies made on higher education by top authorities.

Q. In other words, there will be a sharing of experiences and ideas?

A. That's right. In the past, administrators of Negro schools could read the Southern association's annual proceedings report, which contained some accounts of speeches and actions taken. But that reading is not as valuable as hearing reports and speeches and joining in discussions. Personal sharing of insights can be mutually enriching.

Q. How will this membership benefit Fisk?

A. We feel the university already has achieved a high level of education, as shown by several things, but that we can improve our standards. Participation in the association should provide us with new ideas for future growth.

Q. What status did Fisk have prior to admission to membership in the Southern association?

A. The Southern association, one of six regional accrediting associations, previously had a special committee to accredit Negro schools, but did not admit them to full membership. Fisk was the first Negro school approved by the Southern association in 1930.

Q. Prior to the Southern association's action of granting membership to 18 schools last month, did other regional accrediting agencies admit Negro colleges to full membership?

A. Yes, approximately 20 of the 100 Negro colleges are outside the South. Some of them were accredited and are members in the North Central and the Middle States associations.

Q. In what ways can association membership benefit Fisk?

A. There will be increased opportunities to obtain money from foundations. The foundations are more likely to give money to an educational institution they believe has an ongoing future.

Q. What per cent of its budget does Fisk get from foundations?

A. Of the approximately $1,290,000 annual budget, some $300,000 comes in endowment income from money originally given the university by foundations.

Q. Will full association membership increase other contributions, also?

A. It should, since membership would symbolize the high quality of our education here.

Q. What are your financial needs?

A. At present, we had about a $45,000 deficit last year. In fact, approximately 50 per cent of the nation's private colleges operate on deficit budgets. We will need about $60,000 more operating income each year.

Q. Could you elaborate on your financial needs?

A. We need approximately $300,000 for remodeling Jubilee hall, which was built in 1876, and which still houses 170 women. We need $500,000 to $600,000 for a new combination fine arts building and auditorium. Fisk has no auditorium.

Q. Will association membership enhance the academic reputation of Fisk?

A. Fisk always has enjoyed a fine national reputation. However, the future contact of our educators with leaders of white Southern schools at Southern association meetings should help others learn more about and consequently respect our university the more.

Q. Does Fisk hold membership in any other accrediting agency?

A. Yes. The National Association of Schools of Music.

Q. Does Fisk plan to continue membership in the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools for Negroes (a non-accrediting agency for improving higher education among Negroes)?

A. Yes, we and the other 17 Negro schools admitted to membership in the Southern association have decided to continue in the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools for Negroes. We feel a responsibility for helping other schools lift their standards so they can become full members. No Negro secondary schools have been admitted to full membership in the Southern association yet.

Q. Are there other reasons for continuing membership?

A. Yes, we have some common problems with other Negro schools and want to help share in their solution. Some are raising standards of Negro high schools as soon as possible. The association has just appropriated $10,000 to study the problem that is reflected in the poor performance of many Negro students in certain standards tests. Then there is the extent to which we have to be concerned with the problems of Negro students as a group. The verbal ability of Negro students who come out of some of the high schools of our race is low.

Q. What will be the role of Fisk at this time?

A. To continue to offer a high quality of liberal arts education to provide leaders who can help solve the difficult problems of our day.

Fisk Plans $ Million Expansion

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Two new buildings, to cost more than a million dollars, will soon be rising on the campus of Fisk University.

A three-story men's dormitory is expected to see completion by Sept. 15. About two months later, a combination student union and dining hall is scheduled to open. With furnishings, the two structures will cost $1,200,000, according to Dr. Stephen J. Wright, president of Fisk.

DR. WRIGHT said the new men's dormitory will accommodate 150 students and will be located near the Fisk gymnasium.

The student union building, with two floors, is to be built near the Fisk chapel. It will include a main dining hall, serving 600 persons, a book store, a snack bar, a student lounge and space for dancing, the campus post office and office space for student organizations.

The new buildings are being financed mainly by an $885,000 loan granted last spring by the Community Facilities Administration in Washington.

Fisk is one of 18 Negro schools admitted to the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools last month, an event which will admit the white and Negro educators to "a sharing of experiences and ideas . . . at a time when communications between the races is decreasing in many realms," the educator said.

The new president of Fisk said the admission will also increase the Negro colleges' opportunity to obtain money from foundations. Fisk has an annual budget of $1,290,000, has an average deficit of $45,000 each year, needs $500,000 to $600,000 for a new fine arts building and auditorium, having no auditorium at all.

The pulpit-size Bible was a gift to Abraham Lincoln "from the loyal coloured people of Baltimore as a token of respect and gratitude" on July 4, 1864.

Original Bond Manuscript Part Of Collection at Fisk

The original manuscript of the now famous Inglis Lecture delivered by Dr. Horace Mann Bond at Harvard University last December is no wa part of the Negro Collection in the Fisk University Library.

The important address given by the Dean of the School of Education at Atlanta University drew widespread comment across the nation because Dr. Bond emphasized the point that Negroes are placed at disadvantage when subjected to certain tests now in use.

Titled "The Search for Talent," the address will be published later this year by the Harvard University Press.

The Fisk Library has also received a $500 sub-grant from the Association of College and Research Libraries from funds made available by U.S. Steel. Librarian Arna Bontemps said the grant will be used for the purchase of listening tables.

The Fisk Library is one of 87 to receive the sub-grants. According to Miss Eileen Thornton, president of ACRL, these grants are in relatively small amounts, ranging from $200 to $800, according to the needs and purposes for which they are to be used.

"Our aim is to place the money widely, where it will make a direct, though small, contribution to higher education and where it will act as seed money for further library support from local funds," she said.

President Stephen J. Wright explained in a letter to parents of Fisk students this week that this increase is necessary because "the basic costs of higher education have been rising steadier for the past several years."

Chicago Def. Sat. 3-8-58

Dr. Wright pointed specifically to the heavier expenses involved in teachers' salaries, educational supplies and equipment, and living costs.

Tuition at Fisk will be increased by $90, residence fees by $49 and incidental fees by $8. This means that the total cost of attending Fisk university, exclusive of laboratory and applied music fees, will amount to $969.

"Social Revolution" Favors Negro, Clinic Head Declares

TALLAHASSEE - - "A social revolution is taking place in America today in regard to the Negro," said Dr. W. A. Bisson in delivering the 71st annual Founders' Day address at Florida A and M University.

Buildings totalings $2,045,000 were dedicated following the convocation. Structures dedicated were Perry-Paige agriculture and home economics building, $1,250,000; guest house $45,000; university commons addition, $250,000 and student union, $500,000.

The guest speaker, who is director of the Bisson Clinic and hospital in Memphis and a member of the class of 1922 at A and M, pointed out six factors which he feels brought about a change in the Negro. They are:

(1) Migration of the Negro from the rural south to the industrial west and north.

(2) A changing of attitude on the part of many industrial leaders is now recognizing the talents and skills of the Negro rather than his color.

(3) The part played by the U. S. Government is insisting on non-discrimination in employment due to race in all of its government contracts.

(4) The Supreme Court provision in wiping out segregation in public schools; and ruling that segregation in any form is illegal.

(5) The fact that today there are 12 states that have enforceable laws that prohibit any discrimination in employment and these state contain 33 per cent of the United States population.

(6) The farsightedness of the Negro in preparing and training for better jobs and better opportunities

FAMU's Growth Under Dr. Gore Gains Spotlight

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — The Florida A. and M. University family looks forward each year to April 1 as a special kind of day, for it was on April 1, 1950, that scholarly George W. Gore Jr. became president of what was then Florida A. and M. College.

The nationally known educator and administrator at that time was affectionally known as Dean Gore, a title he had held as dean of Tennessee A&I State College from 1928 through March 30, 1950, and during which time he earned an enviable reputation as one of the most astute administrators and forward looking educators in the South.

Dr. Gore

To say that Florida A&M has made tremendous strides under his administration, perhaps would be the understatement of the year. However, one might point out a few of the more significant achievements under his administration which is highlighted by the 1957 admission of the university as a full-fledged member of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

At the time that President Gore accepted the duties and responsibilities of the then 62-year-old Florida A. and M. on April 1, 1950, the school was officially designated as "college"; today, it is one of three state-supported universities now operative.

THE EIGHT sub-divisions are as follows: college of arts and sciences, college of law, school of agriculture and home economics, school of education, school of nursing education, school of pharmacy, vocational-technical institute, and the graduate school. With the establishment of these schools and colleges, the institution more than met the technical requirements for classification as a university on Sept. 1, 1953.

The following undergraduate degrees are now offered: Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science. Professional degrees include the degree of Bachelor of Science in nursing education, Bachelor of Science in pharmacy, and Bachelor of Laws. In the graduate school, the degrees of Master of Arts, Master of Education, and Master of Science are granted.

The physical facilities of the institution have been expanded during the past eight years. The following major additions have been made: Dairy barn, $87,500; two faculty duplexes, $25,000; building construction laboratory $10,000; law wing of Coleman Library, $400,000; ROTC building, $250,000; guest house, $45,000; men's dormitory, $937,000; addition to nurses home in Jacksonville, $12,000; addition to dining hall, $250,000; science pharmacy building, $1 million; agriculture-home economics building, $1,250,000; classroom building, $500,000, and football stadium, $366,000.

Work is rapidly progressing on the $500,000 dormitory for women and the $159,000 demonstration school cafetorium.

Dr. Annabelle E. Spann's New Position

TALLAHASSEE—The appointment of Dr. Annabelle E. Spann to the newly created position of association dean of the school of agriculture and home economics has been announced by Florida A and M University President George W. Gore, Jr. Dr. Spann's appointment became effective February 1.

The new appointee is a native of Chester, S. C., and was graduated from South Carolina State College at Orangeburg with the bachelor of science degree in home economics in 1946. She began working toward the doctorate degree in home economics education at the university of Wisconsin in 1955, and completed her work recently.

Dr. Spann's field of major interest is home economics education. She is a former home demonstration agent for the State of South Carolina, serving from 1946 until 1950. She served as an instructor in home economics at Alabama A and M College, Huntsville, from 1952 until she entered the University of Wisconsin in 1955 to pursue doctoral studies.

IN ADDITION, university personnel and students will play key roles in the three-day confab. Dr. E. O. Minor, professor of education, and James L. Bruton, head of the printing department, will serve as consultants, and David C. Collington, head of the information services, will serve as a resource person.

Edwin Demeritte, editor of the '57 Rattler and consultant to the '58 Rattler, and Roger McLeod, editor of the '58 Rattler, will serve as chief consultants in the yearbook section.

The workshop is being conducted for the benefit and growth of high school journalists. It will enable the fledgling journalists to get concentrated training under some of the nation's best known working journalists. In addition, the workshop in its approach will emphasize and provide for student development in such broad areas and aspects of education as group loyalty, democratic action, self-expression and leadership.

"While the personnel of the office of public relations and the department of English do not look upon high school journalism as a vocational course they do feel that attendance at the workshop will enable the high school student to explore journalism to the extent of knowing whether or not he wishes to continue it on a professional level after leaving high school," Charles J. Smith III, workshop director, said.

Dr. H. Manning Efferson, dean of the university and one-time adviser to the student newspaper and yearbook, and Dr. D. T. Turner, head of the English department, will extend greetings to the workshop participants at the opening session Thursday morning.

TALLAHASSEE, March 8—Dedication of four buildings, constructed at a cost of $2,045,000 was the highlight of the traditional Founders' weekend observance yesterday at Florida A. and M. University.

During the 1957 observance, the university dedicated two buildings that cost $1,000,000.

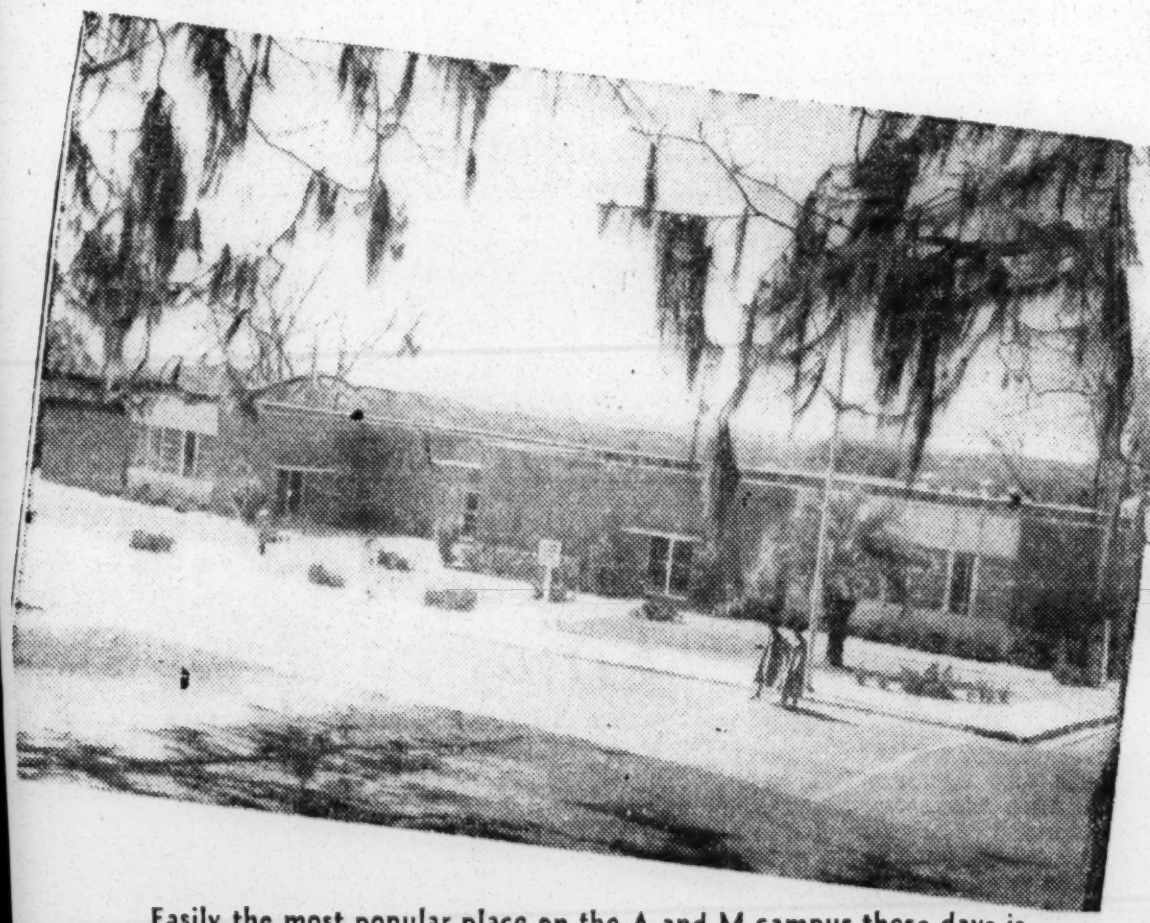
The swank $250,000 addition to the University Commons at Florida A and M University was among the four buildings dedicated during traditional Founders' weekend Friday morning.

The ultra modern $1,250,000 agriculture and home economics building was named in honor of the late B. L. Perry Sr., who joined the faculty in 1916 and served as head of the department of agriculture, and the late Mrs. Ellen O. Paige, who taught home economics from October, 1887, the year the institution began operation, until 1925.



Easily the most popular place on the A and M campus these days is the recently completed $500,000 Student Union Building, more popularly known as the "SUB."

The fourth building dedicated was the $45,000 Guest House. The Founders' address was given by Dr. W. A. Bisson, director of Bisson's Clinic and Hospital, Memphis, Tenn.

Negroes Seeking Equality,

No Longer Accept 'Inferiority'

TALLAHASSEE — "Instead of accepting inferiority, Negro-Americans are now seeking equality in increasingly larger numbers," said Dr. Charles H. Wesley, president of Central State College, to a record graduating class at Florida A & M university commencement exercises here.

An overflowing crowd of more than 2000 persons stood in the corridors and the aisles of Lee Hall auditorium to hear the Central State College president and to see a record 341 graduates receive their degrees. The old record of 301 was in 1955.

Among the platform guests were Gov. LeRoy Collins, State Atty. Gen. Richard W. Ervin, jr., Dr. J. B. Culpepper, executive director of the State Board of Control, and Board Chairman James J. Love.

Speaking on "The New Age of Exploration," the noted educator and historian told his audience:

"Instead of accepting inferiority, Negro-Americans are now seeking equality in larger numbers. Instead of accepting segregation there is movement toward the place at which they will be able to choose their direction toward equality of treatment.

"They have pride in their institutions and wants to make them better. They do not propose in their anti-segregation campaigns to scrap their ships and scramble aboard the ships of others. They plan to make theirs so good that others will want to come aboard also."

Dr. Wesley feels that this new age of exploration has moved with amazing speed in atomic physics bio-chemistry, genetics, electronics, and space.

"These charges have had profound influences on life in every area," remarked the speaker.

Special areas to feel these motivations, according to Dr. Wesley, have been education, international relations, and American life as it relates to the Negro minority.

FACUS ON NEW WORLD

Directing his message to the graduates, he said;

"As graduates of this university in adddition to knowledge and information, develop your vision and imagination so that you may look and work toward a new world; abandon your concepts of inferiority and secure a continuing and adequate preparation in the university of books and life. These were the characteristics of old, make them yours as you stand on the threshold of your new world."

Dr. Gardner C. Taylor described life as a bazaar or country fair and people are walking down the line of booths choosing which booth they will stop in and what wares they will pick up. "All of these wares are not what they seem to be," he warned, "some of them will dull in your hand." The president of the Protestant Council for Greater New York and pastor of Concord Baptist Church of Christ in Brooklyn delivered the baccalaureate sermon Sunday afternoon.

The university's coveted Meritorious Service Awards went to tennis star Althea Gibson, New York, Dr. Lincoln Childs, Jacksonville, journalist John H. Johnson, Chicago, author of White Mother Jessie B. Sams, Los Angeles, and Robert O. Mensah, press attache of the Ghana Embassy in Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Mary Thomas Edwards of Apalachicola and Tallahassee was presented the alumni association's 50-year gold medal by Dr. H. D. Goode of Pensacola, association president.

SILVER MEDALS

Twenty-five year silver medals were presented to Dr. Childs; the Rev. Herbert E. Moore and Gilbert E. Porter of Tallahassee, Miss M. M. Morehead and George B. Nairn of Jacksonville, Mrs. Terresia Pender of Cincinnati; James Small of Tallahassee; Mrs. Eva B. Hamilton of Tampa, Mrs. Maude T. Green of Tallahassee, and Charles E. Bolen of Ft. Pierce.

The largest number of degrees were conferred in the school of education which awarded 164 degrees. The second largest number, 115, was conferred by the college of arts and sciences, the college of law conferred five bachelor of law degrees—the largest in its seven year history (the first class was graduated in 1954)

A further breakdown of degrees conferred is as follows—school of engineering and mechanic arts, one; school of nursing education, five; school of pharmacy, two; school of agriculture and home economics, 20—total undergraduates 112—graduate school—28 masters of education (Ed. M.) and one master of science (M.S.)

TALLAHASSEE — (Special) — The Florida A&M University Playmakers who enplaned for a tour of the African continent Tuesday, Sept. 30, are representing an institution whose first president was the grandson of an African King.

Aside from this close tie with the people of Africa, presently several A&M graduates and faculty members, now on leave, are serving in various capacities in several African countries.

The Playmakers will go to Monrovia, Liberia; Freetown, Sierre Leone; Accra, Ghana; Lagos, Nigeria; Brazzaville, French Equatorial Africa; Leopoldville, Belgium Congo; Usumbura, Tanganyika; Entebbe, Uganda; Addis Abba, Ethiopia; Khartou, Sudan, and Cario, Egypt.

President Tucker came to the United States as a youth and was educated at Oberlin College, earning both the bachelor and master degrees in philosophy from the famed Ohio institution. (S. Randolph Edmonds, playmaker's director, is also an Oberlin graduate.

President Tucker taught school at Georgetown, Ky., and New Orleans, La. He later practiced law in Pensacola and it is from this west Florida town that he first came to Tallahassee to lobby for the establishment of the Florida State Normal College for Colored students.

The 1895 college catalogue lists President Tucker as "president" and "professor of mental and moral philosophy."

Four FAMU graduates are currently working in Africa and several African students have earned degrees at A&M according to G. W. Conoly, executive secretary of the Alumni Assn.

Gammon Celebrates 10th Year Of Richardson Administration

Pres. Richardson revealed a 100 percent growth in student enrollment from 40 bachelor of divinity candidates to 80 B.D. and S.T.M. candidates added and three masters' degrees have been awarded. The 1958 student body comes from 19 states, the District of Columbia, British Guiana and Korea, representing 40 undergraduate institutions. Clark College with 15 and Claflin College with 10 have the highest representations.

The Gammon head also reported that in the area of physical plant growth buildings more than 75 years old have been renovated and modernized; the heating plant overhauled, grounds landscaped and new roadways and parking areas added. Two new apartment buildings for married students, housing 16 families, have been added, while the older cottages for student families and the dormitory apartments have been modernized and are filled to capacity, Dr. Richardson noted.

ASSETS, BUDGET INCREASE

Financial assets and the budget of Gammon have been doubled, the capital resources of the Seminary having been increased over half a million dollars, the president said. In this area, it was also stated that salaries of instructional personnel have been raised more than 100 percent; the financial aid given to students has risen from $1,100 in 1948 to more than $20,000 in 1958; over 10,000 books have been added to the library during the ten years, and the proportion of the faculty holding Ph.D. degrees has markedly increased, from one in 1948 to six in 1957.

It was also noted that the curriculum has been especially developed in the practical areas such as clinical training and supervised field work. "The Ministry and Human Relations" is a new course added this year. Dr. Richardson's report describes this course as "beginning with a survey of race problems around the world and then giving parallel attention to the race problem in America. The purpose of the course is to give the students a working knowledge of the history of the problem, and above all to give them an acquaintance with constructive efforts to deal with the problem, so that when they confront the problem in their local communities they will not be overawed or discouraged, but will be able to play a useful and possibly a leading part in achieving better relations. This is a course offered to seniors."

Progress at Methodist Seminary

Gammon Notes Steady Growth

ATLANTA, Ga.—The trustees of Gammon Theological Seminary meeting in their March annual session heard a resume of striking progress as President Harry V. Richardson presented the 10th report of his administration.

Dr. Richardson outlined first of all a 100 per cent growth in student enrollment from 40 B.D. candidates to 80 B.D. and S.T.M. candidates in 1958. During the decade, graduate theological instruction has been added and three master's degrees have been awarded. The 1958 student body comes from 19 states, the District of Columbia, British Guiana and Korea, and represents 40 undergraduate institutions. Clark College, with 15 and Claflin with 10, have the highest representations.

IMPROVEMENT and expansion of the physical plant has been another area of growth, as buildings more than 75 years old have been renovated and modernized. The heating plant has been overhauled, grounds landscaped, and new roadways and parking areas added. Most outstanding has been the addition of two new apartment buildings for married students, which house 16 families. The older cottages for student families and the dormitory apartments have been modernized and are filled to capacity.

Financial assets and the budget have both doubled. The capital resources of the Seminary have been increased over half a million dollars. Salaries of instructional personnel have been raised more than 100 per cent. The financial aid given to students has risen from $1,100 in 1948 to more than $20,000 in 1958. Over 10,000 books have been added to the library during the 10 years. The proportion of the faculty holding Ph.D. degrees has markedly increased, from one in 1948 to six in 1957.

Trustees attending the meeting were Bishop J. W. E. Bowen, Atlanta, president of the Board; Bishop Robert E. Jones, Waveland, Miss.; Bishop M. W. Clair Jr., St. Louis, Mo.; Bishop Willis J. King, New Orleans, La.; Bishop Edgar A. Love, Baltimore, Md.; Dr. James S. Thomas and Dr. C. W. Loughlin, Nashville, Tenn., and the following Atlanta members: Col. Willis M. Everett Jr., L. D. Milton and Dr. H. B. Trimble. Following the meeting, President and Mrs. Richardson entertained the Board at luncheon in the president's home.

Gammon Commencement Draws Huge Crowd Sun.

The seventy-third baccalaureate and commencement exercises of Gammon Theological Seminary drew a crowd on Sunday afternoon, May 18, that overflowed Thirkield Chapel and the surrounding halls. Friends, relatives and alumni came from many states to honor the class of '58 and the distinguished clergymen who were receiving honorary degrees and awards.

President Harry V. Richardson presented Dr. Merom Cuninggim dean of Perkins Schol of Theology Southern Methodist University Dallas, Texas, who brought a fresh and stimulating message from his rich background of international study and theological education.

HONOR OF AIM

Speaking on the subject, "The Honor of a Certain Aim," he placed the calling of the ministry "amid the peril of uncertain ways" as shown by the troubled spots all over the world as well as the symbol of Little Rock.

Dr. Cuninggim listed many qualities needed by the outgoing class of ministerial students. Foremost among them were three: 1. Faithfulness, to an assigned task, to the fundamental purpose, concept and dedication of one's calling. He specially stressed faithfulness to the disciplines of a life of study.

IN DALLAS PRESS

He commented on the articles carried in the Dallas Press telling of this faithfulness on the part of an Atlanta woman in her 70's who had recently graduated from high school. Dr. Cuninggim said to the graduates, "Be faithful to the fact that yours is a learned profession."

"Secondly," he continued, "having committed yourself to a life of learning, that is not enough. Now you must act upon it and with courage, the second important quality. Gammon has shown this quality, here at this seminary where you have the particular task of training the Negro minister in the midst of a society that denies equal opportunity to all. Gammon has been courageous, resolute, not craven, or not with bravado, but has walked the cool, calm path of fortitude, accomplishing its special task.

This same spirit is needed by the individual. It took courage for 301 white ministers of Alabama to declare themselves on pressing racial issues. They took courage from the Manifesto prepared by the 80 Atlanta ministers. If the white needs courage, the Negro minister needs it of a higher order, the courage of a Martin Luther King to refrain, to restrain himself, so that his march is always constructive."

"The third quality," Dr. Cuninggim concluded, "is more rare, that of trust, of leaving the rest to God, of letting go. It is not abdication, but it is serenity of spirit. It is always positive but it is a reliance, deep and profound. It is a carelessness but not a lack of caring, a poised assurance, a debonair trust based on the faith of Martin Luther's hymn, "God's truth abideth still, His Kingdom is forever."

Dr. Cuninggim paid high tribute to the selfless spirit of Gammon as it looks ahead to new developments.

The speaker's final charge to the graduates was "With poised perspective, see the essential importance of this hour. Let the Lord guide you, not man's opinion, not desire for advancement. Be careless of self, trusting in Him and the strength of His might."

Special music was provided by Gammon and Clark singers with Mrs. Isaac Mullins of Gammon as soloist. The following seniors received special honors and awards:

Gammon To Observe Its 75th Year

Friends of Gammon Theological Seminary are invited to join the campus group at 8 p. m., November 4 in Bowen Hall for a special observance of the Seminary's 75th birthday year. This evening celebration will feature Bishop J. W. E. Bowen who has kindly consented to be the speaker, using the theme, "I Remember." Bishop Bowen's association with Gammon goes back 60 years to the days when his father was Professor of Church History and later President.

The Gammon Women's Fellowship under the direction of Mrs. Oswald Bronson, president and Mrs. Therman Taylor, chairman of the program committee, are presenting Bishop Bowen. He has been asked to especially reminisce about his mother who was known widely for her graciousness the many years she was on the campus as a professor's wife, President's wife and in her years of widowhood. The publicity staff of Gammon, engaged in historical research has found many items about Mrs. Bowen as an accomplished pianist, accompanying great choruses as more than 5,000 would gather in the old Moddy Tabernacle for an Epworth League Rally or at the "Congress of Africa" held yearly in connection with the Cotton Expositions of the 90's.

Mrs. Bowen was the founder in 1906 of the first Gammon Women's group. An old love seat of hers, now in the home of President and Mrs. Richardson will be used Nov. 4 in Bowen Hall where this community wide event will be held.

JACKSON STATE COLLEGE

JACKSON, Miss. — The "Remember Amos Hankins Week" signs which went up on the Jackson State College campus last week were really signs of the time for faculty and students alike on the campus. The week of Dec. 15-21 was proclaimed "Amos Hankins Week" by the student body, Joe L. Jackson, president. Finances were naturally a problem during those lean years and according to Amos, it was suggested by the President, who was searching for other sources of revenue, that he "sell peanuts on halves." Amos told the President: "Yes, I'll take my half and yours too."

Pre-Christmas activity at Jackson State College has made the final week of school in 1957, for the student body of close to 1,850, a full and eventful one. The week before Christmas was ushered in Sunday, December 15, by the College Concert Choir and Vesper Choir as the two choirs combined their efforts to give a brilliant concert. To Discuss Future Of Negro College This Friday Night

NINE COLLEGE PRESIDENTS ON PERICLEAN HISTORY WEEK FORUM

Nine keenly-trained college presidents from the various levels of above- high school training in Alabama were scheduled to discuss the provocative topic "The Future of Negro Colleges in a Changing South" at the Periclean Club Negro History Week Forum at 8:30 this Friday night, Feb. 14 at the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church pastored by the Rev. Luke Beard.

In addition to Presideent Gray, Owens, Foster and Drake, there will be five other Alabama college presidents appearing on th 27-year-old Negro History Week feature which has included speakers 25 times.

Dr. H. Councill Trenholm, president of Alabama State College, Montgomery, Ala. will serve as moderator. Dr. A. G. Gaston, president of Booker T. Washington Business College; Dr. Talmadge Dewitt Bussey, president of Birmingham Baptist College; Dr. William A. Bell, president of Miles College and Dr. H. D. Gregg, president of Daniel Payne College will share the speaking.

The forum is expected to touch off fireworks because of the explosive nature of the topic to be discussed. Education has become a sensitive word in the Deep South, where resistance to change has been noted.

Forum music will be contributed by the Parker High School choir under the conductorship of Prof. W. S. Henry. Winners in the essay contest sponsored by Periclean Club will be presented prizes and awards by Mrs. A. G. Gaston Mrs D. V. Guice, president of the club will preside.

DR. JOSEPH F. DRAKE
President, Ala. A. and M. College

This will mark the first time in Birmingham's forum history that nine college presidents have appeared on the same program to discuss the same subject. The fact that the church-related, state-supported, business-sponsored ,and privately-financed institutions of higher learning are represented on the forum has added to the speculation that it will be a lively searching, and far-reaching discussion program.

Admission to the forum is free.

Racial Litigation Reclaims Spotlight In Southern States

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (Special)— Litigation reclaimed the spotlight in nine southern and border states as the fourth scholastic year since the school segregation decisions drew to a close, Southern School News reports here.

Federal courts handed down decisions in 11 school entry cases in Alabama, Delaware, Louisiana, and Virginia, and in a related case in Texas. Way was cleared for further legal action in six cases in five other states.

According to Southern School News no new desegregation was reported as schools closed for the 1957-58 year. However, it was learned that Negro children had been readmitted at mid-term to desegregated schools in Ozark, Ark., from which they had withdrawn last fall.

This left the year-end tally of segregated and desegregated school districts as it has been for the past four months, with no new desegregation reported since November. The count now stands at:

Desegregated districts: 764 of 2,889 bi-racial districts, all but 15 of them in the border states.

Segregated districts : 2,125, including all school districts in Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, Alabama, and Louisiana.

Expanded desegregation programs for next fall were announced by three districts in Maryland and Kentucky, while two "Little Dixie" districts in Oklahoma reported they would shoulder the burden of maintaining segregated schools under the state's financial aid policy for at least another year.

Delaware was at the center of the legal spotlight. Sitting at Philadelphia, the U. S. Third Circuit Court ordered the state board of education to formulate a desegregation program for the entire state. This was the first such action by a court involving any of the 17 states affected by the 1954 decision in Brown v. the Board of Education. But it was an order with which the Delaware board moved promptly to comply.

The segregation - desegregation issue moved toward a legal showdown in Virginia with the U. S. Supreme Court upholding court orders for desegregation next fall in the schools of Charlottesville and Arlington County. Segregationists laid plans for organizing private schools for white children and for retaliatory moves to close Negro public schools (by presenting white pupils for enrollment at Negro schools, thus invoking state school-closing laws on them also). Opponents of such moves talked of court action and taxpayers' boycotts.

Further litigation in Dallas, Texas, following federal court refusal to test a state law, made unlikely there the desegregation some had anticipated.

A summary of major developments state-by-state follows:

ALABAMA

In ruling on Alabama's first public school entry suit (at Birmingham) a three-judge federal court held that the state's pupil placement law was not unconstitutional "on its face" but allowed for the possibility that it might be found "unconstitutional in its application."

ARKANSAS

The first Negro student graduated from troop-guarded Little Rock Central High School at ceremonies which were conducted without major incident. Meanwhile, the school board asked for a delay until January, 1961 in the resumption of integration. Ozark was disclosed to have readmitted Negro children at midterm.

DELAWARE

The state board of education proceeded with a statewide desegregation plan without waiting for a specific time order after a circuit court directed it to formulate such a plan. However, delays were expected.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

At a press conference in Washington President Eisenhower declined to say what would be the government's role in the Virginia school controversy, but emphasized that federal court orders must be obeyed.

FLORIDA

Southern mayors meeting at Jacksonville set up a central police intelligence agency to combat religious and racial bombings. Gov. LeRoy Collins proposed federal-state commissions to decide the "wheres, whens and hows" of school integration in the light of local conditions.

GEORGIA

Way was cleared for trial of Georgia's first school entry suit (in Atlanta) but it was expected that the case would not be heard until next year.

KENTUCKY

Two Kentucky districts announced extension of present integration programs next September and a third shifted district lines affecting the racial composition of a junior high school.

LOUISIANA

In Washington the U. S. Supreme Court held that the preliminary injunction against segregation in the New Orleans school case should not be overthrown on a technicality, and a lower federal court heard a new plea from the school board for dismissal based on the argument that the state, not the board, is the proper defendant in the case.

MARYLAND

Washington County announced a third step in its desegregation program, effective next fall, while in Baltimore a study showed that 600 Negro teachers had been integrated.

MISSISSIPPI

Prof. Clennon King, ousted from the faculty of Alcorn A & M (Negro) College in a controversy over anti-NAACP articles he had written, applied for admission to the all-white University of Mississippi.

MISSOURI

School administrators estimated that 95 per cent of the state's Negro school children are enrolled in districts which are desegregated at some level.

NORTH CAROLINA

Two Negro mothers in Durham filed suit for entry of their children in all-white schools in another attack on the state's pupil placement law.

OKLAHOMA

Two "Little Dixie" districts faced loss of state financing for segregated schools. One indicated it would bear the extra burden itself and the other said it could not afford to operate separate schools longer than one more year.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Segregation remained an issue as political candidates campaigned for nomination (equivalent to election) in the June 10 white Democratic primary. Six faculty members at two Negro colleges were discharged or released in apparent reprisal for alleged participation in civil rights activities. Negro children seeking entry to all-white schools in Charlottesville and Arlington County won court victories, increasing the possibility that some schools may be closed next fall in Virginia.

TENNESSEE

A federal court decision was awaited in the Nashville grade-at-a-time school desegregation case after both sides filed briefs.

TEXAS

Delay of at least a year was expected when the Dallas school desegregation case was opened for new litigation after a federal court refused a test of a new state law.

VIRGINIA

Public schools ended the fourth year in a climate of desegregation without major incident and with two educators commending the results. In one county five schools were burned in acts of arson which some attributed to racial feeling.

WEST VIRGINIA

Public schools ended the fourth year in a climate of desegregation without major incident and with two educators commending the results. In one county five schools were burned in acts of arson which some attributed to racial feeling.

'Ghost Students' Haunt Colleges!

CHICAGO—The tidal wave of panicky college applicants, partly caused by an effective job of talking, on the part of college executives, has engulfed admissions officers in a sea of "ghost students," according to an editorial in College and University Business, the magazine of business administration in higher education published by F. W. Dodge Corporation.

"High school seniors have worried so much about getting into college that some have sent out as many as 20 applications for admissions to various colleges. Each college involved assumes that the application is bona fide and it is entirely possible that all 20 institutions may approve the admission of the same student. Result: one admission and 19 "ghost" admissions. It doesn't take much imagination to see how confusing the situation may become," explains the editorial.

Resolutions to the admissions muddle are offered by the College and University Business editorial.

The first suggestion is earlier notification of acceptance. "The spring of the senior year is too late to make other plans if a student is rejected by the institution of his first choice," states the editorial.

The second suggestion is the acceptance of students based upon their work in the first three years of high school. "Thus a student knows by the beginning of his senior year in high school whether he has been admitted to the college or university of his choice. Actual admission, of course, would be contingent on the continuation of effective academic performance through the student's senior year in high school," adds College and University Business.

In conclusion the editorial states that "as long as college administrators delay until the spring of the high school senior year to advise successful applicants for admission, they will continue to reap the harvest of multiple applications."

Reaches All-Time High

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (ANP) — Fall enrollment of full-time and part-time students in the nation's colleges and universities at the beginning of the 1958-'59 scholastic year reached the all-time high of 3,258,556, U. S. Commissioner of Education Lawrence G. Derthick announced this week. Figuring the Negro population at 15 per cent of the total, the Negro student enrollment can be placed at nearly 490,000.

The 1958 fall enrollment exceeds the previous record in the fall of 1957 by 190,139 or 62 per cent, Commissioner Derthick said.

This was the seventh consecutive year that new records were set in fall enrollments. The number of students enrolled in college for the first time rose to 781,075, a jump of 7 per cent or 51,350 over the fall of 1957.

The 1958 fall enrollees included 2,110,426 men and 1,148,130 women, compared with 2,003,424 men and 1,064,993 women in the fall of 1957.

Of the first-time enrollees last fall, 468,625 were men and 312,450 or 10 per cent, were women. In the fall of 1957, 445,324 of the new enrollees were men and 284,401, or just under 39 per cent, were women.

Commissioner Derthick said that the survey includes all degree-credit students. These are students whose current program consists principally or wholly of work normally creditable toward at least a bachelor's degree. It includes both resident and extension degree-credit scholars, full-time and part-time, taking their studies either in the day or in the evening.

All of the more than 1,900 institutions listed in the higher education section of the 1957-'58 Education Directory giving degree-credit courses were included in the survey, the commissioner said.

Position Of Colleges In Urban Renewal Program Defended

14e) Georgia

By EDDIE WILLIAMS

Tense moments of relief and dejection highlighted a discussion of the University urban renewal project Thursday as citizens in the area questioned officials and spokesmen for the program at a meeting in Warren Memorial Methodist Church.

A new issue was tossed into the discussion when a question was raised over the purchase of private property by colleges in the University System.

A large precentage of the land in the project area is already owned by the various colleges. Under the Urban Renewal Program, a small percentage of land adjacent to several of the institutions is scheduled to be cleared by the city and resold to the colleges which plan to expand their facilities.

Dr. Albert E. Manley, president of Spelman College, Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University, and Dr. James P. Brawley, president of Clark College, defended the move and explained that the colleges were not seeking to deprive individuals of their property.

Dr. Clement explained that the colleges made plans to expand several years ago.

Dr. Brawley said "it is unfortunate the project is called University Center." He explained that it is really a "westside project" and that the colleges were caught up in the web of urban renewal.

The University System will not be directly affected by the city's renewal program. Each institution will conduct its own renewal and expansion program.

Q. V. Williamson, president of the Empire Real Estate Board and a recent appointee to the mayor's Citizens Advisory Committee, explained the general boundaries of the project area.

Most of the property located in the area, excluding the colleges, is scheduled for rehabilitation. Under this program, property owners will be allowed to better their facilities in order to meet city standards.

M. B. Satterfield, executive director of the Atlanta Housing Authority, said the owners could get assistance from the federal government.

Most of the property west of the colleges is scheduled for rehabilitation while that on the east will be cleared and redeveloped for Negro occupancy.

There are about 2,000 families now living in this area, about 19 per cent of whom are home owners, Satterfield said. After development, about 1,100 of these families will have to settle outside the project area.

Warren R. Cochran, executive secretary of the Butler Street YMCA, warned that "we must insist that Negroes not be put all together on the westside." He said ghettos are some of the hazards of such a program as urban renewal if it gets out of control.

Cochrane estimated that Negroes now constitute one-third of the total population of Atlanta, and they occupy one-seventh to one-ninth of the land area.

"The Federal government says there should be no decrease in the land area," he said.

The citizens information meeting was conducted by the Rev. A. F. Fisher, who, with the Rev. E. W. McMillan, is co-chairman of a westside committee formed to interpret the Urban Renewal Program.

This committee is part of a citywide General Citizens Committee which is headed by Bishop W. R. Wilkes, of the Sixth Episcopal District of the AME Church.

Vandiver Is Considering Negro College Closing Bill

Atlanta

Gov.-elect Vandiver and his advisers are reported considering a law which would give the state power to close Negro colleges in case white colleges are ordered integrated.

Atlanta Ga

Under Georgia's present laws, funds automatically would be cut off from any college in which the races are mixed.

But at present the state has no authority to close any other University System branch.

The proposed law apparently would give the state a bargaining weapon—the threat of closing all state - supported institutions of higher learning for Negroes.

There is an integration suit now pending against the Georgia State College of Business Administration. State officials express private opinions that they will win this case, but they fear more suits.

14e(1)

Among the other segregation legislation being considered by the Vandiver administration is a law now in effect in South Carolina. Under that law, any white common school ordered integrated would be closed, as well as the Negro school or schools from which Negro pupils would be transferred.

That would be a milder law than the present Georgia statute, which requires the governor to close all schools in any district in which even one school has been ordered mixed.

However, a parallel law would not necessarily work in relation to colleges, since a Negro applicant to a white college might not come from a Negro school.

The college-closing law would doubtless be controversial, since it might give Negroes an added argument to be accepted by the remaining white schools.

The proposal apparently was suggested by a committee of lawyers named by Vandiver to study segregation problems in other states. Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said he knew nothing of the proposal.

Spelman, M'Brown Are Fully Accredited

At the annual meeting of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools held in Louisville, Ky., December 1-4, two Atlanta colleges, Morris Brown and Spelman, were among fourteen colleges in the southern states accepted to full membership by that body.

The procedure of the Association followed the pattern which was begun last year through which eighteen other Negro colleges were accepted to full membership in the Richmond meeting of that group.

This brings the total to 32 Negro colleges which now hold full membership in the agency which rates and accredits all the colleges and secondary schools in eleven southern states.

Morris Brown and Spelman are therefore along with thirty other Negro colleges, on a par with all other fully approved member colleges in this region.

This action of the Southern Association of Colleges thus places these two institutions in the position of having full and equal participation in the future activities of this accrediting body.

Two Colleges Lose Ratings

Accreditation Taken From Miles and Rust

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—The Southern Association of Colleges dropped two colleges—Miles of Birmingham, and Rust of Holly Springs, Miss., and placed two additional colleges on the separate Negro-approved list—Oakwood of Huntsville, Ala., and Owens of Memphis.

The association also voted to return to Louisville next year because there are not many cities in the South where Negro delegates will be received in hotels with white delegates.

Accepted into full membership were the following:

Barber Scotia, Concord, N. C.; Dillard University, New Orleans; Houston - Tillotston, Austin, Tex.; Johnson C. Smith University, Charlotte, N. C.; Kentucky State, Frankfort; Morris Brown and Spelman, Atlanta; Prairie View A&M, Tex.; Southern University, Baton Rouge, La.; Stillman, Tuscaloosa, Ala.; Tennessee State University, Nashville; Texas Southern University; Virginia Union University, Richmond, and Xavier University, New Orleans.

Meeting last year in Richmond, Va., the association for the first time in history accepted into membership 18 Negro colleges.

The Pupil Placement Decision

There are some misgivings about the efficacy of the recent Supreme Court ruling on the Alabama pupil placement law. In a brief order, the court affirmed the finding of a Federal district panel of three judges "on the limited grounds on which the district court rested its decision."

The lower court ruled last May that the Alabama pupil placement law "furnishes the legal machinery for an orderly administration of the public schools in a constitutional manner by the admission of qualified pupils upon a basis of individual merit without regard to their race or color."

The Alabama act is similar to those enacted by a number of Southern states. It is clearly a device whose aim and purpose is to obstruct the integration law and prevent the admission of qualified Negro pupils to white public schools.

The statute directs school boards to consider such factors in assigning children to schools as mental aptitude, psychological qualifications and "the maintenance or severance of established social and psychological relationships with other pupils and with teachers."

The suit was instituted by the parents of four Birmingham Negro children when the city school board failed to act on their application for transfer to white schools.

They challenged the constitutionality of the placement act and declared it a thinly veiled attempt to circumvent the Supreme Court integration ruling.

On the grounds that the pupil placement act was susceptible to equitable application, the district court which upheld it, refused to probe into the intent of those who sponsored the statute. The district judges argued that the act should not be disallowed unless applied discriminatorily. But the act was applied discriminatorily, that was the basis of the court action against the Alabama school board.

Such specifications as mental aptitude, psychological qualifications and maintenance of social and psychological relationships can easily be manipulated to satisfy prejudicial interest. They are vague norms with wide margins for disagreement and suspicion.

The Supreme Court's sanction of the Alabama law will serve as hypodermic to the segregationists everywhere in the South who have entered into a conspiracy to defeat school integration. Though the high court may eventually strike down the Pupil Placement act, its present ruling prolongs the agony of "massive resistance," and as such it is an important victory, perhaps temporary, for the confirmed racists.

High Court Makes Stand Clear

'Pupil Placement Law' Cannot Be Used as a Bias Instrument

By ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

WASHINGTON (ANP) — The Alabama pupil-placement law "on its face" cannot be considered unconstitutional as long as it is not used as a device to evade school desegregation, ruled the Supreme Court.

This law makes no mention of race, and unlike the Virginia placement law, it is not linked to any "massive resistence" moves.

A three-judge Federal court in Alabama had ruled that the language of the law was not unconstitutional, and as long as it was not applied as a means of preserving segregation it must be construed as a valid method for orderly assignment of students.

THE UNANIMOUS, unsigned, one sentence order issued by the court said it was upholding the lower court "upon the limited grounds" on which its decision had been based.

The lower court had ruled that the Alabama act only "furnishes the legal machinery for an orderly administration of the public schools in a constitutional manner by the admission of qualified pupils upon a basis of individual merit without regard to race or color. We must presume that it will be so administered. If not, in some future proceedings it is possible that it may be declared unconstitutional in its application."

This suit was filed in Birmingham in the name of Ruby F. Shuttlesworth, the daughter of the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, who was recently arrested for challenging the city's segregated bus seating ordinance.

Her lawyers had contended that the pupil placement law was unconstitutional on its face in view of Alabama's record in racial discriminaton both before and after the High Court's desegregation decision.

"AND ACCORDINGLY," stated Miss Shuttlesworth's attorneys, "pupils should not have to wait for an application of such law in accordance with the state's segregation policy before seeking relief in the Federal court."

The High Court seemed to take the position that a state can devise its own placement standards so long as they are not discriminatory. And that the court should not presume a state has acted in bad faith until it proves it by its actions.

The Alabama placement law was enacted in 1955 and amended to its present form in 1957. It now sets up 11 standards for assigning pupils to schools. They include student aptitude, home environment, physical effect on pupil of attending certain schools, the possibility of a breach of the peace, economic retaliation, and social and psychological factors regarding relationship with other students.

THE CASE originated with the Shuttlesworths applied to the local school board for admission of their daughter to a white school nearer their home.

The law requires that school officials must act within 30 days. After three months passed without action, the suit was filed.

The District Court of Alabama, in May of this year, denied the appellant's application for a final injunction to restrain the enforcement of the school placement law on the grounds that her constitutional rights were being denied under such law which is applied in accordance with the state's segregation policy. It was then that the pupil sought relief in the Federal court.

GEORGIA STATE COLLEGE OF BUSINESS EDUCATION
DISCRIMINATION

NAACP Testimony Ordered In Race School Suit Here

J. H. Calhoun, former president of the Atlanta chapter of the NAACP, has been ordered to testify regarding alleged NAACP financial support to four Negroes seeking to breakdown racial restrictions at Georgia State College of Business Education.

Federal Judge Boyd Sloan issued the order which had been sought by Georgia Atty. General Eugene Cook.

For several weeks Cook had sought to secure pre-trial testimony from the ex-NAACP aide. Calhoun declined to answer questions relating to the NAACP in the action or his own assistance as an officer of the organization.

Cooks requested the motion in a brief filed Oct. 10 that Calhoun be compelled to answer questions relative to NAACP aid and contended that the civil suit brought by the four plaintiffs was "not being maintained in good faith." At that time, Calhoun was still president of the local chapter.

OFFERED DEPOSITION

On Sept. 26, Mr. Calhoun offered a deposition in the case presently set for Dec. 1. At that time, lawyers representing Calhoun maintained that his testimony on these questions were irrevelant to the case and that deposition questions could not "serve either the purpose of discovery or as evidence in the action."

Judge Sloan in ordering Calhoun to give testimony held that it was the court's opinion 'that information sought by the defendants has some relevancy to the action or might lead to discovery."

The jurist quoted "Moore's Federal Practice," second edition, which states "Every litigant is in justice entitled to know the identity of his opponents. He cannot be obligated to struggle in the dark against unknown forces." The order compelling Mr. Calhoun to answer certain questions said a time and a place should be agreed upon by counsel.

TIME AND PLACE

"If counsel are unable to agree as to such time and place, then, under proper motion, the same will be fixed by the court," Judge Sloan's order said.

Atty. Gen. Cook in commenting on Judge Sloan's order said the court order would compel Calhoun to answer pre-trial questions. But, he was not certain as to the matter of producing NAACP records.

"Since he (Calhoun) has resigned it may make a difference as to the matter of producing NAACP records," Cook said.

Four Negroes brought suit in federal court after they were refused admission to the Atlanta college. The plaintiffs complained in their suit that admission procedures applied to them were unreasonable and arbitrary.

Delay Sought in College Integration Suit

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook has filed a motion to delay the Federal Court suit that seeks to integrate Georgia State College of Business Administration.

Cook, on behalf of Noah Langdale Jr., college president, and J. D. Blair, administrative dean, asked that the trial, set for Dec. 1, be rescheduled for the second week of January.

The delay was sought to permit Langdale and Blair to attend the meeting of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools Dec. 1-4 in Louisville, Ky.

The motion contends that it is essential that they attend the meeting to assure that Georgia State's accreditation, previously granted on a transitional basis, be made "secure and permanent."

The suit was filed in federal court in September, 1956 by four Negroes who alleged they were refused admission to the college.

Federal Judge Boyd Sloan will rule on the delay motion at a later date.

"If the plaintiffs are genuinely interested in acquiring further education and training, they should be the last to insist on any course which might conceivably jeopardize the academic standings of the institution which they profess a desire to attend," Cook said.

Georgia University Rules Revised After Negro Applied

ATLANTA (UPI) — An official of the Georgia university system admitted in federal court Monday that most of the strict entrance requirements in the system were imposed after a Negro attempted to enroll in the University of Georgia.

The testimony by L. R. Siebert, executive secretary of the Board of Regents, came during the first day of trial in the case of three Negroes seeking to gain admission to the Georgia State College of Business Administration in Atlanta.

Siebert was asked if recent regulations about admission were not drawn up after a Negro, Horace Ward, tried to get into the University of Georgia Law School in 1950, and he finally admitted this was true.

The Negroes contended in the non-jury trial that they were barred from the institution solely because of their race.

The defending State Board of Regents argued that the Negroes were refused admission because they did not comply with entry requirements.

The plaintiffs — Barbara Hunt, Iris Mae Welch, and Myra Elliot Dinsmore—sat in the packed courtroom of District Judge Boyd Sloan as the highest officials of the state university system began testimony on what seemed to be a long historic case.

The main point of attack by the Negroes was a regulation requiring that two alumni and the county clerk or three alumni must sign applications of all college students in the system.

Under Georgia law public schools or state colleges that admit both Negro and white pupils would have all state funds withdrawn.

John T. Blair, registrar and director of admissions at the college; Chairman Robert O. Arnold of the Board of Regents and L. R. Siebert, executive secretary of the board, denied in turn from the witness stand that the racial situation in Georgia affected in any way admission policies

Third Day Of Atlanta School Suit

Witness Asks If Lawyer In School Case Is Klansman

By JOHN BRITTON

ATLANTA, Ga. — (SNS) When asked if he was ever a member of the Communist Party, a plaintiffs witness in the federal suit to end segregation in Georgia State College of Business Administration turned to the inquiring attorney and asked, "do you hold membership in the Ku Klux Klan?"

The Rev. Samuel W. Williams, pastor of Friendship Baptist Church and Professor of Philosophy at Morehouse College added his probe to the terse verbal exchange that furnished color to the third day of testimony in the trial before U. S. District Judge Boyd Sloan.

Williams was being cross-examined by state-hired Defense Attorney B. D. (Buck) Murphy when the state's counsel lashed out at the minister with the question regarding Communist ties.

Before Murphy could withdraw his question upon the insistence of plaintiffs' attorney, D. L. Hollowell, Williams wheeled around in his swivel chair to face Murphy and then asked the defense attorney if he was a member of the Ku Klux Klan.

Williams said Murphy's intimation that he might have been a member of the Communist party justified his question about the he asked the minister was out of order in this case.

Williams was asked on numerous occasions if he was a member of the NAACP, to which the minister said that "I once said that any Negro in his right mind would be a member of the NAACP and I believe I am in my right mind."

The questions of Williams' affiliations came after the Baptist minister persisted in his testimony of Tuesday afternoon when he asserted that J. D. Blair, registrar of GSC, and the late Dr. George Sparks, who was president of the business school in 1956 when the Negroes applied, refused the three Negro applicants, saying the rejection was a policy of the board of regents.

NO GRADUATING CLASS

Williams also re-stated under cross-examination that he told President Sparks, Blair and L. R. Seibert, executive secretary of the Regents, that the required alumni certification from Georgia State graduates was not feasible because the school, as a separate entity, did not then have a graduating class.

He also repeated his Tuesday testimony that the three men he talked with gave no answer to his assertion other than saying that the alumni certification was still the governing rule.

Another witness took the stand at the end of the trial and also stated that he reminded Sparks, Blair and Seibert that no alumni existed at the local business school.

Edward Jacob Clemons, who applied to the business school in March, 1956, but is now a plaintiff to the suit, further stated that Seibert on the occasion also admitted to him that GSC had no alumni.

CLARK GRADUATE

Clemons, a Clark graduate and now an employee of North Carolina Mutual Insurance Co., said that the application blank he sent to the registrar at GSC required only the signature of two graduates of the University System of Georgia.

Clemons said he already had the signature of the Rev. James Weldon, a graduate of the University of Georgia, when he went to the registrars office with his application. Clemons also said he had secured from the Rev. Jordan also a University of Georgia graduate a promise to add his signature on the certificate when it was presented to the registrar.

Clemons said Jordan was with him when he went to see the registrar about admission and added that the minister stated verbally that he was ready and willing to endorse the necessary certificate.

ENDORSEMENTS REFUSED

The insurance employee further said, that the endorsements of the two ministers were refused by Blair and Seibert as the school officials pointed out that the rule listing University of Georgia graduates as eligible to certify had been scratched out.

Clemons told the court, however, that he knew for a fact the phrase qualifying University of Georgia graduates to certify was not scratched out when he sent the application to the registrar's office, thus inferring again that the rule was changed when he was able to secure the signatures of the two graduates of the University System of Georgia.

The admission clause also states that all applicants must have the certification of the judge of the Court of Ordinary. Clemons said Judge Eugene Gunby later promised he would sign the certificates of the Negro applicants if they were forwarded to him along with "the other batch of applications."

GUNBY'S "PROMISE"

Gunby's "promise" was listed by Clemmons as the reason why he sent his application by mail, to the school registrar even though he had been verbally refused acceptance while in the registration lines.

Others who took the stand at the shortened Wednesday hearing included Mrs. Marian McDaniel Moore, former office secretary for the NAACP Atlanta Branch and Mrs. Charlie Mae Knight O'Neill, another March, 1956 applicant to the school.

During the cross examination of Mrs. O'Neill and Mrs. Moore, it was occasionally vague whether the trial was one of ending segregation or a hearing on the membership and finances of the NAACP.

Murphy attempted to extract from Mrs. Moore a statement regarding the method the Atlanta branch used to obtain finances but he was finally stopped short by Judge Sloan when Atty. Hollowell objected to the line of questioning as irrelevant.

The Wednesday session was recessed at approximately 4:15 p. m., after the judge held a hasty conference with lawyers on both sides. The hearing will resume this morning at 9:30 a. m. when what is believed to be the last plaintiffs' witness is scheduled to take the stand.

START OF TESTIMONY

The heated exchange of verbal assaults came in the opening minutes of Williams' testimony in behalf of Mrs. Barbara Hunt, Mrs. Myra Elliott Dinsmore and Miss Iris Mae Welch who are seeking to break down the bars of segregation at the local business college.

Williams was reprimanded by Presiding Judge Sloan because of his retaliatory answer to Murphy's question. However, the judge also told Murphy that the question he asked the minister was out of order in this case.

Williams was asked on numerous occasions if he was a member of the NAACP, to which the minister said that "I once said that any Negro in his right mind would be a member of the NAACP and I believe I am in my right mind."

CLARK GRADUATE

Clemons, a Clark graduate and now an employee of North Carolina Mutual Insurance Co., said that the application blank he sent to the registrar at GSC required only the signature of two graduates of the University System of Georgia.

Clemons said he already had the signature of the Rev. James Weldon, a graduate of the University of Georgia, when he went to the registrars office with his application. Clemons also said he had secured from the Rev. Jordan, also a University of Georgia graduate a promise to add his signature on the certificate when it was presented to the registrar.

Clemons said Jordan was with him when he went to see the registrar about admission and added that the minister stated verbally that he was ready and willing to endorse the necessary certificate.

ENDORSEMENTS REFUSED

The insurance employee further said that the endorsements of the two ministers were refused by Blair and Seibert as the school officials pointed out that the rule listing University of Georgia graduates as eligible to certify had been scratched out.

Clemons told the court, however, that he knew for a fact the phrase qualifying University of Georgia graduates to certify was not scratched out when he sent the application to the registrar's office, thus inferring again that the rule was changed when he was able to secure the signatures of the two graduates of the University System of Georgia.

The admission clause also states that all applicants must have the certification of the judge of the Court of Ordinary. Clemons said Judge Eugene Gunby later promised he would sign the certificates of the Negro applicants if they were forwarded to him along with "the other batch of applications."

GUNBY'S "PROMISE"

Gunby's "promise" was listed by Clemmons as the reason why he sent his application by mail, to the school registrar even though he had been verbally refused acceptance while in the registration lines.

Others who took the stand at the shortened Wednesday hearing included Mrs. Marian McDaniel Moore, former office secretary for the NAACP Atlanta Branch and Mrs. Charlie Mae Knight O'Neill, another March, 1956 applicant to the school.

During the cross examination of Mrs. O'Neill and Mrs. Moore, it was occasionally vague whether the trial was one of ending segregation or a hearing on the membership and finances of the NAACP.

Murphy attempted to extract from Mrs. Moore a statement regarding the method the Atlanta branch used to obtain finances but he was finally stopped short by Judge Sloan when Atty. Hollowell objected to the line of questioning as irrelevant.

The Wednesday session was recessed at approximately 4:15 p. m., after the judge held a hasty conference with lawyers on both sides. The hearing will resume this morning at 9:30 a. m. when what is believed to be the last plaintiffs' witness is scheduled to take the stand.

Judge To Weigh Ga. School Case

ATLANTA — U. S. District Judge Boyd Sloan took under advisement last week a suit by three Negro women seeking admittance to an all-white college here.

Sloan asked the plaintiffs and the defending board of regents to submit written arguments to him by Jan. 1, as the trial phase of the suit ended. He promised to render a decision by the second Monday in January.

The trial involving Georgia State College of Business Administration in Atlanta took up five days of testimony. It was the first of two suits attacking racial segregation practices in Georgia schools and colleges. The other case, involving the entire Atlanta public school system, will be heard next year.

In the current trial, the plaintiffs charged that Georgia's segregation practices made it impossible for them to gain admission to white institutions.

Their attorneys singled out a registration requirement that three alumni from the white college had to certify the capabilities of the applicant as being purposely designed to reject Negroes solely on the basis of

However, defense attorneys sought to prove that the applicants did not measure up to college standards and that the suit was not filed in good faith. They maintained that the application requirements were made to uphold higher educational standards.

The plaintiffs — Barbara Hunt, Myra Elliott Dinsmore and Iris Mae Welch — admitted they had not filed transcripts which are required from all applicants.

REGENTS CHIEF ADMITS SEGREGATION ATTEMPTS

By JOHN BRITTON

The chief administrative agent of the Board of Regents admitted under cross examination Thursday that he remembered saying at a previous school trial that, "I try, as far as possible, to maintain segregation in the state-supported institutions," as he testified at the trial seeking to end segregation at Georgia State College of Business Administration.

After referring to the Horace Ward trial of 1950, Attorney D. L. Hollowell extracted the admission from Dr. Harmon W. Caldwell, Chancellor of the University System of Georgia, at the fourth day of hearings where Mrs. Barbara Hunt, Mrs. Myra Dinsmore and Miss Iris Welch are seeking to enjoin the Georgia Business School from refusing them admittance on a racial basis.

Caldwell said, in attempting to explain his statement for segregation in state supported schools that he recognizes the Board of Regents as a public approved entity.

PUBLIC OPINION

He further stated that "insofar as it is possible, I try to remain responsive to majority public opinion as expressed in state enacted laws."

Caldwell also said, over the objection of Attorney Hollowell, he personally believes members of the white race and members of the Negro race prefer to be segregated. Hollowell's objection was sustained when Presiding Judge Boyd Sloan agreed that Caldwell's opinion was not based on a proven fact.

The chancellor denied that the certification law, of which he admittedly was a major proponent, was designed for the exclusion of Negroes from schools listed as "all white."

He declared that the endorsement policy enacted by the Board of Regents on April 8, 1953, while the appeal of Horace Ward was still pending before the board for admission consideration, was patterned after what he said was the system used by Northern and Eastern colleges.

Caldwell said the certification requirement was initiated after a "thorough" study in 1952 showed the Georgia school system needed a more rigid and uniform standard of entrance regulations.

The chancellor, who appeared as a witness for the defense, said in reference to the allegations that there were no alumni of Georgia State when the Negroes applied, that some of the graduates of the school when it was a division of the university in Athens chose to be designated alumni of the business college.

NO NAMES

Caldwell declared that during the last year of the Atlanta Division of the University of Georgia, all graduates were given a choice of which school they chose to be designated as alumni. He said some said they wished to be business school alumni, however, he failed to recall any names.

During the morning session of the trial, Attorney Hollowell along with the impressive legal oratory of Mrs. Constance Motley, NAACP counsel from New York City, attempted to insert the name of Edward Jacob Clemons as a party-plaintiff to the civil suit.

Hollowell made the motion on the basis of his contention that the present plaintiffs "may not" adequately represent the interest of Clemons, who also made an application to the business college in March, 1956 and was also refused admittance.

Mrs. Motley cited numerous legal precedents without benefit of the many cumbersome law books that defense attorney B. D. Murphy went scurrying down the hall to retrieve in substantiating his objection to the motion for Clemon's intervention into the suit.

Judge Sloan denied the plaintiff's motion.

The attorney ended her appeal in favor of the motion by delivering an indirect retaliation at Murphy's Tuesday tactics when she asked the judge to exclude any issues on so-called moral ground and pass only on whether the Negro plaintiffs are qualified to attend GSC and whether they did apply.

One of the first maneuvers Murphy made during the early minutes of the Thursday hearing was an attempt to throw disfavor on the colleges and high schools the plaintiffs attended by hinting in his questioning that the schools were not properly accredited.

He was stopped short in this maneuver when the plaintiff's attorneys called to the witness stand Dr. Gordon Sweet, executive secretary of the Commission on Colleges and Universities of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

Sweet read excerpts from the official association publication which disclosed that Clark College and Spelman College, in addition to the high schools attended by the plaintiffs, were on the "approved list."

Murphy attempted to make an issue of the fact that the schools were not listed as members of the association during the 1956 school year, however, Sweet pointed out that no Negro institution was accepted into full membership until 1957.

It was during his questioning of Sweet that Murphy was reprimanded for his obvious mispronunciation of the word "Negro." Hollowell objected to the terms Murphy used instead after listening to defense attorney's poor enunciation several times. Judge Sloan warned Murphy to be careful to pronounce the term correctly thereafter.

Others called to the stand Thursday by Murphy included J. D. Blair, registrar of GSC, and Charles Block, Macon lawyer and former chairman of the Regents education committee.

Both men testified in an attempt at re-confirming the reasons for the ruling requiring that all prospective applicants have the signatures of Georgia resident alumni of the local business college. They both declared it was not designed for discriminatory reasons.

Court was recessed at 5 p. m. Thursday and hearings will resume at 9:30 this morning with the defense attorneys continuing to present their arguments.

Ruling Expected In Georgia State Suit by Jan. 12

Integration Trial Ends in U.S. Court

By JACK NELSON

A federal court ruling on the Georgia State College integration suit is expected before Jan. 12.

A non-jury trial of the case ended in Judge Boyd Sloan's court here Friday.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook predicted after the end of the 4½-day trial that Judge Sloan will dismiss the suit.

Judge Sloan instructed attorneys for both sides to file written arguments with him "by the first of the year." He said he wanted to dispose of the case before presiding over a court session of criminal trials beginning Jan. 12.

HQ RECORDS

State attorneys attacked the NAACP-financed suit with evidence aimed at showing that the moral and scholastic records of the plaintiffs (three Negro women) would not meet entrance requirements at the college.

Attorneys for the plaintiffs—Barbara Hunt, Iris Mae Welch and Myra Elliott Dinsmore—attempted to show that they were denied admission to the college in 1956 because of their race.

A motion to add a fourth Negro as a plaintiff to the suit Thursday was interpreted as indicating that plaintiffs' counsel believed their case had crumbled. The attorneys contended that the three plaintiffs "may not adequately represent" Negroes as a class. They asked that Edward J. Clemons, an Atlanta Negro insurance man, be included as plaintiff.

Judge Sloan denied the motion.

Cook told newsmen he was "very confident" that the court will dismiss the complaint in the integration case. In a prepared statement, he said:

"I feel we successfully demonstrated the fact that:

"1. The regulation adopted by the Board of Regents requiring endorsement of applicants by two alumni and the ordinary or clerk of the superior court, or three alumni in lieu of the ordinary or clerk in counties with a population of 100,000 or more, as to residence, character and ability to pursue a college education is reasonable, fair and non-discriminatory as applied to the Negro race; and,

"2. That the moral and scholastic background of the applicant cannot stand the test ordinarily required for admission; and,

"3. That the suit was not instituted in good faith by the complainants, but is simply an effort on the their part to perform a function for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People—that is to say, that the complainants came into court without clean hands and without an honest motive to pursue a college education at the State College of Business Administration.

"These are three of the major issues in the case."

D. L. Hollowell, Negro attorney representing the plaintiffs, said he thought it would be "improper" for him to predict the outcome of the case "while it is in the breast of court."

FACULTY SIGNED

J. D. Blair, Georgia State registrar, testified under cross-examination Friday that non-alumni faculty members of the college were allowed to endorse students' applications.

Blair acknowledged that he had not been a student at Georgia State, but had endorsed some applications.

Hollowell asked if it wasn't true that white applicants could obtain endorsements from "faculty members who are floating around in the halls." Blair replied that he did not think it was done as a "common practice." But he said that as a matter of policy, all faculty members were considered as alumni for endorsement purposes.

The registrar conceded that it would be a rarity for a white applicant to be unable to obtain two alumni endorsements.

Hollowell asked if it wouldn't be extremely difficult for a Negro applicant to obtain such endorsements. Blair said that would be a matter for individuals concerned to answer.

State attorneys introduced in evidence Friday a large stack of applications from white students which had been rejected.

ATLANTA — Georgia has no policy of segregation in state-supported colleges, the chancellor of the university system told a Federal court last week.

But he failed to explain why not a single person of color has been allowed to attend the University of Georgia in its 173-year history.

The chancellor, Dr. Harmon Caldwell, made the statement during trial of suit filed by three women seeking admission to the Georgia State College of Business Administration.

DR. CALDWELL'S testimony was rebutted by the Rev. Samuel W. Williams, pastor of Friendship Baptist Church and professor of philosophy at Morehouse College.

"The registrar and late president of Georgia State College said they were acting on orders of the State Board of Regents when they refused admission to colored persons," he said.

The conflicting evidence was heard by U.S. District Judge Boyd Sloan.

Plaintiffs in the suit are Mrs. Barbara Hunt, Miss Iris M. Welch and Miss Myra E. Dinsmore.

In addition to Dr. Caldwell's testimony that the school had a no - segregation policy, four board members corroborated this assertion.

HOWEVER, THE Rev. Mr. Williams told the court that Mrs. Hunt's application was spurned when she submitted it to the college in 1956.

The minister said he was a plaintiff along with Mrs. Hunt at the time she applied for admission. He said she was told her application could not be accepted because the school was "under orders of the board."

In an apparent attempt to counteract the clergyman's assertion, the state sought to show that the NAACP was behind the suit.

The state also claimed the suit is not an honest effort by the plaintiffs to enter the school. It called the petition "spurious litigation financed by the NAACP."

STATE ATTORNEY Eugene Cook said he thought the state had shown that its regulations governing admittance to the school were fair and non-discriminatory.

He said the state had shown that the moral and scholastic background of the applicants would not meet the test required for admission. He added that the suit was not brought in good faith.

He alleged that the plaintiffs were acting for the NAACP and did not "have an honest motive for coming into court." All three plaintifs have denied Cook's charges.

Under state regulations, applicants must be endorsed by two alumni and the clerk of the superior court in counties of more than 100,000 persons before they are admitted.

ATTORNEYS FOR the plaintiffs emphasized that the requirements for admission are discriminatory against colored persons.

They argued that white institutions have no colored alumni.

Georgia law would curtail all funds to the school if it is ordered to integrate.

Judge Sloan ordered all attorneys to make final arguments last week in order that a decision in the case may be handed down on Jan. 12.

THE STATE sought to bring in the personal life of the plaintiffs in cross - examining them.

Mrs. Hunt testified that the requirement demanding alumni signatures disqualified her. None of the alumni she contacted would sign for her.

"As a result of this," Mrs. Hunt told the court, "the registrar stamped my application incomplete."

In another move obviously aimed at keeping Georgia State College lily - white, the state brought in its legal victory last year that threw out an integration suit by Horace Ward.

MR. WARD sought admission to the University of Georgia Law School.

His petition was tossed out of court on the ruling that he had not complied with entry requirements and had applied for admission to another college while his case was in progress.

State attorneys sought to prove that Mrs. Hunt had applied for admission to another school. They also tried to draw testimony that the plaintiffs were not paying the costs of court action.

The long, drawn out case, filled with hours of testimony, reached a near apex when another witness testified that his application to the college was endorsed by a white Decatur minister.

EDWARD J. CLEMENTS, an Atlanta insurance man, told a cross - examining attorney that his good character was attested to by the Rev. James L. Weldon, when he sought to enroll in the school.

Mr. Clements appeared as a witness for the plaintiffs.

He said despite the endorsement and the willingness of another white clergyman to sign for him, college officials turned his application down as "incomplete."

He said GSC Registrar J. D. Blair told him the endorsing ministers were graduates of the University of Athens, not Georgia State.

A CLAUSE on the application states that alumni of either school can sign, Mr. Clements pointed out.

Several other colored persons who had tried to enroll in GSC also testified they had been turned down. They all said they had retained copies of their applications.

Asked how he got the Rev. Mr. Weldon to sign his application, Mr. Clements said Mrs. Barbara Boone, who also had tried unsuccessfully to enter the school, obtained the signature for him.

While questioning the Rev. Mr. Williams, State's Attorney B. D. Murphy asked:

"ARE YOU a member of the NAACP?"

"Any colored man in his right mind is," the Rev. Mr. Williams snapped back.

"Are you a member of the Communist party?" the school board lawyer asked.

"Why, of course not," the minister replied, "and I'd like to ask if you're a member of the Ku Klux Klan."

RULING HIS question improper, Judge Sloan told the clergyman that witnesses "don't ask questions of attorneys."

Most colored witnesses questioned said they had submitted transcripts of earlier school work to the college up until the time their applications were rejected.

Judge Sloan heard the cases minus a jury. Final arguments were ordered to be presented in writing.

4 Regents Deny State Racial Bars

By GENE BRITTON

Four members of the Board of Regents swore in federal court Monday that no racial bars exist in admission practices at Georgia's state-supported colleges and universities.

The regents and the board's executive secretary were unanimous in denying that one regulation in particular—one requiring endorsement by two alumni of the college an applying student wishes to enter—is aimed at keeping institutions of higher education segregated.

The education officials appeared as "hostile" witnesses for the plaintiffs in the federal court trial of a suit brought against the Board of Regents by three Negroes who contend they applied for admission to all-white Georgia State College of Business Administration and were turned down because of their race.

COULDN'T QUALIFY

The plaintiffs, Barbara Hunt, Myra Elliott Dinsmore and Iris Mae Welch, said they were unable to meet the requirement which calls for endorsement by two alumni plus certification by the county ordinary.

Attorneys for the Negroes concentrated most of their attack during the first day of the trial on that requirement, attempting to show that it is intended to discriminate against Negroes.

They called to the stand Board Chairman Robert O. Arnold of Covington and Regents Everett Williams, Statesboro; Howard H. Callaway, Hamilton, and Morris M. Bryan Jr., Jefferson.

DESIGNED FOR QUALITY

Each of them testified that the purpose of the regulation was "to improve the quality" of students entering the state institutions.

Earlier, John D. Blair, registrar at Georgia State, testified he had never been instructed by the regents that the school "is operated exclusively for the enrollment of white students."

In response to questions by plaintiffs' attorney, E. E. Moore, Blair said the three Negroes who brought the suit submitted their applications in June, 1956, but that they were incomplete. He said they lacked the endorsement by two alumni of the college and by Fulton County Ordinary Eugene Gunby.

OUT-OF-STATE AID

Under general questioning from plaintiffs' attorney, D. L. Hollowell, L. R. Siebert, executive secretary of the Board of Regents, told the court out-of-state aid is offered to all Negro students who apply for admission to white colleges within the university system.

Hollowell asked him if the out-of-state aid program were not maintained to encourage Negroes to attend colleges in other states "even when they want courses that are offered by all-white schools within the university system"?

Siebert said he couldn't answer that.

Hollowell also pressed Siebert for an answer as to whether the Regents' admission requirements were passed after Atlanta Negro Horace Ward tried unsuccessfully to enter the University of Georgia Law School.

JUDGE GIVES ORDER

After verbally sparring with Hollowell over his (Siebert's) knowledge of the exact date of Ward's application, Siebert admitted that they were. At one point, U.S. District Judge Boyd Sloan—who is hearing the case without a jury—told Siebert, "I am getting a trifle tired of this quibbling," and ordered Siebert to answer the attorney's questions directly.

Board Chairman Arnold, under examination by Moore, said the Regents have no policy about any racial matter.

Moore asked him how, then, "did you get to operating completely separate schools for whites and Negroes." Arnold said they "were already that way long before I came on the Board" and haven't been changed.

GEORGIA STATE COLLEGE OF BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION
DISCRIMINATION

Expect Ruling In January

WRITTEN ARGUMENTS TO CLIMAX COLLEGE SUIT

By JOHN BRITTON

The week-long federal trial involving three Negro women seeking to break down segregation at Georgia State College of Business Administration came to an end Friday morning at approximately 11 a. m. without a decision handed down by presiding Judge Boyd Sloan.

Defense Attorney B. D. (Buck) Murphy told Judge Sloan that the state had presented all its evidence after J. D. Blair, GSC registrar, and Dr. Noah Langdale, Jr., reaffirmed the state's contentions regarding the arbitrary certification ruling of the Board of Regents.

Murphy added at the end of Thursday's hearing that he had considerably more items to use against the plaintiffs. However, he ended his defense Friday morning on a comparatively quiet note as he replaced some of his prospective witnesses with written documents he submitted into recorded court evidence.

Russell T. Roberts, one of the original four plaintiffs to the suit who dropped out of the litigation one week before the hearing started, was scheduled to have been called as a defense witness, but Murphy failed to put him on the witness stand.

NO DECISION

No decision was handed down by Judge Sloan Friday pending the presentation of the final arguments to be submitted to him in writing by attorneys on both sides at a later date.

Plaintiffs' Attorney D. L. Hollowell told the judge he could present his written argument and contentions of law at the end of December while Murphy advised that he would make an effort to have his written argument prepared for presentation at a similar date.

The attorneys for both sides had the right to argue orally after the presentation of final evidence, however Judge Sloan suggested they submit a written brief of final arguments to afford him a better chance to study the case.

Sloan told the lawyers to include in the respective written arguments their contentions as to what they believe the court should rule from the evidence presented in court.

The case of Mrs. Barbara Hunt, Mrs. Myra Dinsmore and Miss Iris Mae Welch against the Board of Regents and officials at GSC ended on a note of speculation from supporters of both sides.

The vocal sympathizers of the state's case seemed to believe the plaintiffs would lose this case. They pointed out that Hollowell may have also thought the case was lost when he attempted to intervene another name as a party-plaintiff to the suit Thursday morning.

The attorneys for the plaintiffs attempted to gain court approval of a move to allow the name of Edward Jacob Clemons to be inserted into the list of plaintiffs contesting discrimination at GSC. Many persons expressed the belief that Hollowell made the move on behalf of the young insurance man because the plaintiffs felt they had a weak case and were likely to lose on the basis of existing evidence.

On the other hand, a few spectators said they believed Hollowell and his legal partners attempted to assert Clemons' name to test the validity of their contention that the present suit is a "class action."

CLASS ACTION

The plaintiffs argued Thursday that the three women involved in the legal skirmish are not merely seeking relief for themselves, but rather they are seeking "to establish the civil rights of every member of the class of which they are a part."

They were obviously recalling a statement made by former Georgia Governor Herman Talmadge who once said that every Negro seeking admittance to a school listed as "all-white" would have to file suits individually.

The move to insert the name of Clemons as a party-plaintiff in the present suit was thought to be an attempt by the plaintiffs' attorneys to clarify the policy of the court in regard to Talmadge's statement.

The judges' decision to disallow the intervention of Clemons may or may not be an attempt by the court to substantiate Talmadge's pledge, however, Judge Sloan ruled that the plaintiffs had not shown conclusively that the suit could be considered a "class action."

Judge Sloan cautioned the lawyers at the adjournment of the trial that he would like to have all arguments and any additional evidence before him by January 10 so a decision can be rendered before the Criminal Division docket begins on that date.

Sloan adjourned the major integration trial until further order of the court. A decision is expected from the judge approximately the first week in January.

GIRARD COLLEGE
DISCRIMINATION

Court Backs College Ban On Negroes

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 24 (AP)— The Pennsylvania Supreme Court today upheld the naming of private trustees by Girard College to carry out Stephen Girard's wish that the school be attended by "white male orphans" only.

The state's highest court, in a 4-1 ruling, sustained a decision rendered last October by Philadelphia's Orphans Court.

The ruling held that the school, founded with money left by Girard—colonial Philadelphia merchant prince—could continue to operate under the terms of Girard's will.

Attorneys representing two Negro boys had sought to obtain a court ruling that their clients had to be granted admission to the school because the Board of City Trusts, a semi-official agency, was serving as school trustee.

sion, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court upheld a September ruling in which the Philadelphia Orphans' Court named the private trustees after holding that "it is the universally accepted rule of law that the trustee must be fitted to the trust and not the trust to the trustee."

In upholding the Orphans' Court, the majority opinion of the State Supreme Court rejected the major argument of the city, the state and counsel for two Negro boys seeking admission to the school. The plaintiffs contended that Girard's primary object had been public administration of the school.

Segregation Issue Denied

The Pennsylvania and Philadelphia courts declared, however, that Girard's main purpose had been a school for "poor, white male orphans." The state court denied that segregation was an issue in the case, which, it said, involved nothing more than a man's right to leave property as he saw fit.

The nineteen-page prevailing opinion was written by Chief Justice Charles Alvin Jones. Justices John C. Bell Jr., T. McKeen Chidsey and Benjamin R. Jones concurred. Justice Michael A. Musmanno wrote a twenty-two page dissent.

Chief Justice Jones stated that such a race limitation as Girard had written in his will was "but one of the manifestations of the right of private property." The preservation of this right, he said, "is as vital to our Negro citizens as it is to their white brethren."

The majority opinion also dismissed the contention that Girard College had become a public school through its long association with the city. "We hold on the basis of compelling testamentary evidence," the Chief Justice wrote, "that Girard College is private charity capable of being lawfully administered by private trustees."

Justice Musmanno's dissent took sharp issue with that conclusion.

"In order to make Girard College a private institution," he said, "it would be necessary to repeal at least five acts of the Pennsylvania General Assembly: nullify forty-eight ordinances of Philadelphia City Council, and strip the college of all the public maintenance, supervision, and operation it has had for 120 years.

"The Orphans' Court can brandish no legal wand," he added, "with which it can wipe out 126 years of continuous governmental control and shrink the oak tree of Girard College of today into the acorn left by Stephen Girard."

Girard died in 1831.

GIRARD COLLEGE WINS COURT TEST

Pennsylvania Bench Upholds Use of Private Trustees and School's Negro Ban

By WILLIAM G. WEART

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 24— The State Supreme Court upheld today the substitution of private for public trustees as a means by which Girard College could continue as an institution for fatherless white boys.

The United States Supreme Court had ruled last April that the refusal of public trustees, an agency of the Commonwealth, to admit Negroes had constituted discrimination by the state in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, which protects the rights of citizens.

The school was founded 110 years ago under the will of Stephen Girard, a nineteenth century Philadelphia merchant. Girard had specified that the school was to be for "poor, white male orphans." It now has about 1,100 pupils.

In today's four-to-one dec

Girard College wins latest court test

PHILADELPHIA

According to the latest ruling of the Pennsylvania State Supreme Court, Girard College can remain a segregated institution "for poor, white male orphans only," and two colored youths must still be denied admission.

The ruling by the state high court on Friday upheld the September decision of the Philadelphia Orphans' Court. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled last April that the college was operating in violation of the 14th Amendment.

IN A 19-page opinion, the state and Orphans' Court denied that the main purpose of the founder of the 110-year-old school was segregation. The issue involved, it said, was nothing more than a man's right to leave property as he saw fit.

To get around the Supreme Court's ruling, the Orphan's Court substituted private trustees for public trustees, holding that "it is the universally accepted rule of law that the trustee must be fitted to the trust and not the trust to the trustee."

JUSTICE Michael A. Musmanno dissented in the 4-1 opinion — thwarting another move of two colored youths to be admitted to the school founded by a Philadelphia merchant.

"In order to make Girard College a private institution," said Judge Musmanno, "it would be necessary to repeal at least five acts of the Pennsylvania General Assembly; nullify 48 ordinances of Philadelphia City Council and strip the college of the public maintenance, supervision and operation it has received."

Girard rehearing requested

PHILADELPHIA

Seeking reargument of the Girard College case, a joint petition was filed with the State Supreme Court last Tuesday.

Reconsideration of the Jan. 25 ruling upholding substitution of private for public trustees was asked in the three-signature petition.

The local Orphans Court removed the Board of City Trusts as administrator of the school. This move followed a U.S. Supreme Court decision holding that public trustees could not bar colored pupils from the college. The court named 13 new trustees.

The reconsideration plea was made by counsel for William Foust and Robert Felder, ten boys denied admission, the Commonwealth and the City of Philadelphia.

Signing the petition were William T. Coleman Jr., attorney with Councilman Raymond Pace Alexander, for the boys; Deputy Attorney General Lois G. Forer, acting for Attorney General Thomas D. McBride, and City Solicitor David Berg-

Girard College Case Appealed To High Court

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court Wednesday was asked again to clear the way for admission of Negroes to Girard College in Philadelphia, a school founded over a century ago for "poor, white male orphans."

Stephen Girard, a 19th century Philadelphia merchant, made that specification in providing for the institution in his will.

Attorneys for two Negro boys seeking entrance to the school won a Supreme Court ruling on April 29, 1957, that their exclusion by the board of city trusts, a semi-official agency, which served as school trustee, was forbidden by the U. S. Constitution's 14th amendment.

The Supreme Court said the board was an agency of the state and, although acting as a trustee, its refusal to admit Negroes was discrimination by the state.

After that decision, the Philadelphia Orphans Court appointed 13 private trustees to administer the will. This appointment was upheld by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court in a decision last Jan. 24.

A new appeal filed by the Negroes' counsel with the highest tribunal again attacked their exclusion. Attorneys for the city and state joined in the appeal.

The appeal questioned "whether a state, consistently with the 14th amendment, can convert a publicly operated school into a private school solely for the express purpose of denying Negroes their previously adjudicated constitutional right to attend the school."

The appeal also questioned whether the Philadelphia Orphans Court in removing the board of city trusts had violated the 14th amendment "when the express and sole purpose and effect" of the action was to deprive the two Negroes of their asserted right to attend Girard College.

Controversial School Mixing Case Weighed

WASHINGTON (UPI)— The Supreme court may act today on one of the most ticklish school segregation cases yet.

The controversy comes from Philadelphia where two Negroes are seeking admission to Girard College, a school for orphan boys.

Stephen Girard, wealthy businessman and philanthropist, left the money to found Girard College in 1831. His will restricted admission to "poor, white, male orphans."

The court has been asked to let stand a decision of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court denying admission of Negroes to Girard. It could do so in a brief order or it could set the case for argument next term.

The U. S. Supreme Court ruled last April racial discrimination by the school was unconstitutional because it was then administered by the board of city trusts, a state agency. Subsequently new trustees were appointed by Philadelphia Orphans Court and the case began another legal round.

Cases on which rulings could be handed down today include:

—Alabama's ouster of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

—President Eisenhower's dismissal of Washington attorney Myron Weiner from the now-defunct War Claims Commission.

—Security risk dismissal of Max Lerner, a New York City subway conductor, under the state's 1951 security risk law.

GIRARD COLLEGE BAN ON NEGROES STANDS

Washington June 30 (AP)
The Supreme Court refused today to review an arrangement whereby Girard College in Philadelphia has continued as a school for white orphans only.

The high court ruled in 1954 that the school violated the Constitution in barring Negroes because the institution was governed by public trustees. To get around this private trustees were named.

Stephen Girard, colonial merchant prince, specified that the school was to be for white boys only in providing for the institution in his 1830 will.

Attorneys began legal proceedings in 1954 to compel admission of two Negroes.

REVIEW ALSO DENIED

After the 1954 Supreme Court ruling the Philadelphia Orphans Court appointed thirteen private trustees to administer the will. The Orphans Court action was affirmed by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court last Jan. 24 causing attorneys for the Negroes to appeal again to the highest tribunal. Counsel for the city and state joined in the appeal.

Today's Supreme Court action was in a short order that said that a motion by the new trustees to dismiss the appeal had been granted. Futhermore, the court said it was also denying a petition for review.

The effect is to let stand the new arrangement whereby the school may adhere to the wishes of Stephen Girard that the school be operated for white orphans only.

CITY MAY APPEAL AGAIN

Philadelphia, Pa., June 30-City Solicitor David Berger said today that Philadelphia might ask the Supreme Court to rehear the case.

Girard College was opened in 1848 and now has about 1,100 pupils. Stephen Girard died in 1831, leaving a gift of about $2,000,000. The fund has grown since then to approximately $100,000,000.

The Supreme Court yesterday refused to review an arrangement whereby Girard College in Philadelphia has continued as a school for white orphans only. P.A10

The high Court had ruled in 1954 that the school violated the Constitution in barring Negroes since the institution was governed by public trustees. To get around this, private trustees were named for the school.

Stephen Girard, colonial merchant prince, specified the school was to be for white boys only in providing for the institution in his 1830 will.

Attorneys for two Negro boys began legal proceedings in 1954 to compel their admission.

Counsel for the Negroes won a Supreme Court ruling in 1954 that their exclusion under terms of the will by the Board of City Trusts of Philadelphia — a semiofficial agency that served as Girard College trustee — was forbidden by the U. S. Constitution's 14th Amendment.

The Supreme Court ruled the Board was an agency of the State and although acting as a trustee, its refusal to admit Negroes amounted to discrimination by the State.

After this ruling, the Philadelphia Orphans Court appointed 13 private trustees to administer the will. The Orphans Court action was affirmed by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court last January 24. Counsel for the city and State joined in the appeal.

Yesterday's action was in a short order that said a motion by the new trustees to dismiss the appeal was granted.

The appeal questioned whether a state "can convert a publicly operated school into a private school solely for the express purpose of denying Negroes" the right to enter Girard.

Counsel for the Board of City Trusts and for the 13 substituted trustees replied:

"The attempt by appellants to represent this case as an unwitting blueprint for evasion of the 14th Amendment is completely without foundation. Girard College is not a public school. It is a private charity established and administered according to the will of a private individual and maintained entirely by private funds."

IN PHILADELPHIA

Negro Fight To Enter College Ends

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The long and bitter battle over whether Negroes should be admitted to city-operated Girard College ended Thursday.

After dozens of hearings in Pennsylvania courts and in the U.S. Supreme Court, an audit of the Stephen Girard estate was filed by the Board of City Trusts. No opposition appeared.

This was the step leading to the final action—turning the operations of the college over to a new private board of trustees.

The accounting filed by the board showed the Girard estate to be worth about $2 million. It was nowhere near that to start with, but over the years careful investment has vastly increased the original fortune of Stephen Girard, pioneer merchant, industrialist and philanthropist.

The report was submitted to Judge Robert V. Bolger of Orphans Court. All parties to the litigation asked him to approve transfer of the assets to the new board. That it will be done is considered a certainty, for Thursday was the last chance for opposition to be voiced.

The litigation grew out of an effort to open the college to Negroes. Girard, in his will, specified that enrollment be restricted to poor white male orphans.

The city and state joined in the effort. The Supreme Court ruled that a public agency could not carry out Girard's provision. Later it upheld the transfer of control of the college from the public board to a private one, which will live up to the terms of the will.

The private board will assume control of both school and estate as soon as the actual transfer of funds is made.

Baltimore

The two-day seminar held on the campus of Woman's College of the University of N.C., Greensboro, was attended by 22 college student representatives from Sweet Briar, Duke, University of N.C. (Chapel Hill and Woman's College Divisions) and Hampton Institute.

Jan 3-8-58

HIGHLIGHTS OF the seminar included the fostering of better student relations at home and abroad.

Special attention was focused on methods of procuring a closer relationship with student unions throughout the world where the principles of the international student conference had been violated and to assist them in some way toward securing academic freedom.

The group also discussed suggestions for colleges admitting foreign students.

Last year Miss Howard was awarded one of five U.S. scholarships of $1,000 each to attend an international seminar at the University of Ghana, Gold Coast Africa, sponsored by the Canadian World University Service.

HAMPTON INSTITUTE TO HOST FOREIGN EXCHANGE STUDENTS

Baltimore Afro

Hampton, Va., June 27 — Hampton Institute will be host to a group of 70 foreign exchange students on its college campus July 2 and 3 under the auspices of the Student Christian Association, according to an announcement today by the Rev. James M. Jones, SCA director of Hampton Institute.

Representing 18 countries, these students have spent the past school year with an American family in the New York area. They are part of 1032 students who come from Europe, Central and South America, the Near and Far East under the sponsorship of the American field service to live with an American family while spending their senior year in a U.S. high school.

Their stay at Hampton is part of a three week bus tour which the American field service provides for the students at the end of their school year. The students on this tour will travel through eight states before joining other groups in Washington, D.C., where they will be received by President Eisenhower and congressional leaders.

Jan 13-58

The American Field Service hopes that the students, who represent 18 countries, will gain a broader view of American ways and life and that the 50,000 American people who meet these students will also gain understanding of other cultures through meeting these teenagers.

HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Harvard Integration

At that time the application of one Beverly Williams came to the college authorities.

President Everett's ruling is a classic that ought always to be remembered. He said:

"Admission to Harvard College depends upon examination. If this boy passes the examination, he will be admitted; and if the white students choose to withdraw, all of the income of the college will be devoted to his education."

H.U.'s budget cut from 5 to 4 millions

WASHINGTON, D.C. (NNPA) —Howard University requested an appropriation of $5,455,000 from the Federal Government.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare trimmed the request to $4,100,000, and the Budget Bureau cut it down to $4,000,000, hearings before a House appropriations subcommittee disclose.

Pointing out that the cut amounted to $1,455,000, Rep. John E. Fogarty, of Rhode Island, subcommittee chairman, asked Marion B. Folsom, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, if there was a good reason for that.

"WE HAD a budget committee of our own review very carefully all the requests of the different agencies," replied Mr. Folsom.

"We knew we were going to face a tight budget situation this year and wanted to make as many reductions of the original requests as possible."

"You mean take out the fat that might be in there?" asked Mr. Fogarty.

"ANY FAT we could find or any items which we might consider not fat but important items that could, however, be deferred," replied Mr. Folsom.

In addition to the $4,000,000 for salaries and expenses of the university, recommended by President Eisenhower, the budget requests also include $171,000 for plans and specifications.

It asks $163,000 for liquidation of contract authorization for construction of buildings, making a total of $4,334,000.

DR. MORDECAI W. JOHNSON, Howard University president told the subcommittee that the item of $4,000,000 for salaries and expenses represents an increase of $200,000 over the appropriation of $3,800,000 for the current fiscal year.

The increase, he explained, will be used as follows:

1. $107,407 to provide 14 additional teachers in medicine and dentistry to serve the scheduled increase of 81 in the enrollment of medicine and dentistry at the existing student - teacher ratio in these colleges.

2. $21,697 to provide instructional supplies and equipment for the scheduled increased enrollment in medicine and dentistry.

3. $63,000 for merit increases in the salaries of outstandingly able teachers.

4. $40,896 to complete the sum of $141,792 required to operate and maintain the plant and equipment of the new preclinical medical building.

THESE FOUR items total $235,000, but Dr. Johnson did not say where the additional $35,000 was coming from.

The university expects to get an additional $35,000 for instruction and departmental research through increased student fees.

The completion of the new preclinical medical science building last year, Dr. Johnson told the subcommittee, permitted the university to begin a four-year program, approved by the Congress, for a "practical doubling" of the physicians and dentists educated at Howard.

Budget Bureau Cuts Howard U. Approriation

The university expects to get an additional $35,000 for instruction and departmental research through increased student fees.

The completion of the new preclinical medical science building last year, Dr. Johnson told the subcommittee, permitted the university to begin a four-year program, approved by the Congress, for a "practical doubling" of the physicians and dentists educated at Howard.

This plan calls for increasing the number of medical students to a net total of 400 (16 additional students are accepted in anticipation of a 4 per cent loss in four years).

The first step in these admissions, Dr. Johnson said, was inaugurated this year with the planned admission of 28 additional medical students and 53 additional dental students.

The second step, he said, provides for the admission of 28 medical students and 53 additional dental and dental hygiene students to be accommodated by the pre-clinical faculty of medicine.

The university plans to have these 416 medical and dental students served by a pre-clinical faculty of 63.8 teachers, representing an overall ratio of one pre-clinical teacher for each 6.5 students.

Congress provided for 11 additional pre-clinical teachers this year, making a total of 46. The number now required to complete the pre-clincial staff and make it efficient is 17.8, Dr. Johnson said. He proposed that seven of these teachers be appointed now and that the remainder be appointed as soon as possible.

Seven teachers would be appointed in dentistry. The Dental college has one teacher to eight students. Dr. Johnson said this is the average ratio prevailing in state-supported dental schools.

Flemming urges more H. U. aid

WASHINGTON, D.C. — (NNPA)—Dr. Arthur S. Flemming, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, Monday said he favors enlarging and better equipping the Howard University Medical School to serve the entire nation.

Dr. Flemming made his statement at a press conference after his attention was directed to remarks made by Senator Hubert Humphrey, Democrat, of Minnesota, in a speech at the Albert Lasker Awards luncheon of the American Public Health Association.

In his speech, Senator Humphrey referred to the report of a group of medical educators and industry executives, headed by Dr. Stanhope Bayne - Jones on the continuing crisis in medical education.

THE REPORT said that to maintain the existing ratio of 130 doctors for each 100,000 population would require the construction of from 14 to 20 new medical schools.

At an earlier news conference, Dr. Flemming said the Bayne - Jones recommendations "will not be put on the shelf to gather dust" and that he would use the Budget Bureau preliminary estimates for the carrying out of some of the recommendations.

Declaring that "a watchful and inquiring eye" will be kept on the Secretary and the Budget Bureau, Senator Humphrey said in his New York speech:

"Low incomes, poor schools and social handicaps have combined to keep colored Americans a generation behind in the march toward better health and longer life. If the health of our colored fellow citizens is to reach the statistical levels of the rest of the population, we need a dramatic increase in the number of physicians serving the colored community."

IN SPITE of this, discriminatory barriers continue to exist in medical shcools throughout the country.

"Without in any way lessening the obligations of other schools to remove discriminatory barriers, we must plan a larger, even better equipped school at Howard University."

Asked to comment on the Humphrey remarks, Secretary Flemming said:

"If there is an opportunity to make that kind of contribution at Howard, I would be very much in favor of doing everything possible to see that it can be made."

According to Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard University, if Meharry Medical College is excluded, the enrollment of medical and dental students at Howard University in 1957 exceeded the enrollment of colored students in all the other medical and dental schools in the United States.

Dr. Johnson added that the total annual output of colored physicians in the United States "hardly exceeds the number required to replace those who annually die."

"If today we were giving the segregated colored people in the Southern States the per capita relationship between a physician and the people that prevails in the country at large," he said, "we would need 15,000 physicians to do that."

WASHINGTON, D. C. — If being a successful woman in today's highly competitive society means anything at all, it means doing an important job well enough to gain the attention and respect of the nation.

At least that is the story of Mrs. Avis Peters Robinson, a native of Norfolk, Va., who is nearing her 25th year as secretary to the president of Howard University and 29th year as a member of the school's staff.

HANDLING EFFECTIVELY for so long such an important position might have proved to be a most difficult task for someone of lesser abilities, but not for the well-trained Mrs. Robinson.

Her grasp of complex as well as routine matters connected with her job have made her a invaluable assistant to President Johnson.

IN FACT, IT was this ability that got her started on the road toward becoming a good secretary. After graduating from the old Norfolk Mission College in Norfolk, Mrs. Robinson secured a clerical job with a private concern.

When the principal of the then new Booker T. Washington High School in Norfolk got ready to organize a Business Department in the school, he remembered a former apt student, Avis Peters, whom he asked to set up the department.

THIS MRS. Robinson did and taught in Norfolk for 10 years. During this time she acquired additional study at Hampton Institute and Columbia.

Mrs. Robinson took a leave of absence from Booker T. to enroll in the College of Liberal Arts in 1929. The school was in a building boom and extra clerical help was needed.

MRS. ROBINSON secured a part time position under the direction of Miss Lulu V. Childers, then director of the School of Music.

Help was also needed in the president's office and soon Mrs. Robinson was holding two part-time jobs and attending classes.

SHE RECEIVED her B. A. degree in English in 1932 and Dean William Stuart Nelson, administrative assistant to the president, persuaded Mrs. Robinson to accept a full time clerical appointment in the president's office.

After Dean Nelson left, Mrs. Robinson's next boss turned out to be one who would later gain international fame—Nobel Prize winner Ralph J. Bunche.

In 1934 Mrs. Rbinson was promoted to secretary to the president and four years later earned the M. A. degree in English.

FROM WHERE she sits, Mrs. Robinson has been able to lend a helping hand to the countless persons having business in the office of the president.

Solon Says Funds For Howard Same As Private School Plan

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — Senator A. Willis Robertson, Democrat, of Virginia has sought to liken Federal support of Howard University and Freedmen's Hospital to a proposal to give Virginia property and Virginia funds to private institutions for the education of white children whose parents oppose integration in public schools.

"Under a law passed by the special session of the Virginia General Assembly in 1956 to keep Virginia public schools segregated, tuition grants are authorized to pupils in communities where public schools are closed because of integration.

Senator Robertson, a member of the Byrd machine which is committed to keeping public schools segregated in Virginia, finds support for his suggestion of giving state funds and property to private institutions for the education of white children in communities where the public schools are closed in a bill pending in the Congress to transfer Freedmen's Hospital to Howard University for a teaching facilities.

He told the Senate that persons who approve of the operation of Howard University and Freedmen's Hospital and want to see them continued, and particularly those who favor turning over Freedmen's to Howard, cannot with consistency criticize similar operations which might be considered by Virginia or other states to continue segregated schools.

Howard University is a quasi-public institution. Congress authorized Federal appropriations in 1928. Ever since it was founded in 1867 the Federal Government has contributed towards its support. Federal appropriations to it now run about $4,000,000.

FEDERAL AGENCY

Freedmen's Hospital is a Federal agency. The Federal Government appropriates funds for its salaries and maintenance. A part of its budget comes from pay patients.

Robertson told the Senate he realizes that it may be said that the purpose of a state law to give state funds and property to private institutions would be to allow white children to continue to attend racially segregated schools.

"But was not the obvious purpose of Howard University and Freedmen's Hospital to take care of educational and health needs of colored persons in separate institutions, rather than to try to make room for the former slaves in existing institutions which could have been enlarged to serve both races?" Robertson asked.

"And where in the Constitution is a Federal Court given the power to tell a state or its political subdivisions the terms on which publicly-owed property can be disposed?"

Robertson said the Federal Government has spent millions of dollars and proposes to spend more millions in a program which has been almost exclusivly for the benefit of colord people.

"Property seized from the white people of the South was sold and some of the proceeds which were not dissipated by corrupt bureaucrats were used to found a college for colored students and a hospital for colored patients in the District of Columbia," Robertson charged.

91 YEARS

"Education and hospital treatment have continued for 91 years on a subsidized basis."

Robertson pointed out that the Howard University Medical School has a few white students and that George Washington University has at least one colored student in its medical school.

If a Federal aid program is desirable, he asked, why should not George Washington share in the kind of grant proposed for Howard University -- the grant of a hos-

Big Wheel on Campus

When Her Pen's in Hand, People Hear All About It

By Helen Austern

WHEN softspoken Sylvia Taylor, a Howard University senior, sits down to write a letter to her sister back home she has to give her subject extra-special thought.

For the same "Dear Sis" message that makes its way through the mails to Chicago also appears in Howard's weekly Hilltop newspaper, which keep students and teachers abreast of the latest campus events.

Publishing her letters home is only one of Sylvia's services to Howard community life. Her poised, quiet dignity has also made her a natural choice for the posts of president of the Alpha Chapter of Alpha Kappa Alpha, president of the student National Education Association and vice president of the senior class.

On top of that she manages to remain unruffled by a math major's schedule that sets her off to an early start three times a week for a full morning of physics and keeps her going through an afternoon of modern algebra. Crammed in between these labs and logarithms are courses in education, philosophy, and writing to prepare Sylvia for teaching in a Chicago public school.

"Taking courses isn't enough though," she says. "A teacher must know her students personally and know about them too." To this end, she applied for and won an American Jewish Committee fellowship last summer that permitted her to take a second look at her Chicago alma mater, Hyde Park High. Studying the effects of integration on the life of the school, Sylvia came up with a thesis that a high school level human relations course could help students adjust to the change.

The initiative and industry that carried her through this project also won her the Howard Woman's Club award as "Woman of the Year." In naming Sylvia the outstanding Howard coed, the alumnae group also took note of her high Dean's list academic standing and the $4000 scholarship that is carrying her through college.

Sylvia's sorority sisters in Alpha Kappa Alpha are also benefiting from the initiative of their brown-eyed basileus. For example, there's Sylvia's "Culture Unlimited" campaign that gives talented student musicians and speakers a monthly opportunity to perform, not to mention her hostess work project at D. C. General Hospital or the toys sent to Freedmen's Hospital children's ward.

WINNING the confidence of those she meets is one of Sylvia's topmost talents. Last summer, spruced up in a supersonic green double trapeze, she proved her prowess in salesmanship as a member of Chicago's Carson, Pirie, Scott and Co. College Board. Her record of sales showed everything from college blazers to blankets for the bed, as she convinced the collegiate customers that they'd need everything new to get in step with the newness of college life.

The "newness" of Sylvia's own experience at Howard has been enriched by contact with students from many lands. "The idea of a world that is growing so small shocks many people until they actually meet foreigners," Sylvia says. "Then they lose their fears as they realize that these people aren't so different after all." These world-wide interests have made her a regular visitor at the International House where she has made friends from India, Africa and Europe.

In spite of the fact that her dormitory life has been spent in "a quadrangle consisting of five dorms," Sylvia's studies at Howard have proceeded with logical sureness toward their goal.

Next fall she will join her mother, Mrs. Leo H. Ellis, as a member of Chicago's public schools staff. And maybe, in addition to her classes in math, she'll convince the educators to let her test her theories about high school human relations as well.

Howard Compared To Virginia Schools

Robertson Cites U. S. Aid, Backs State Pupil Plan

Federal support of Howard University today was likened by Senator Robertson, Democrat of Virginia, to the possible transfer of public schools to private corporations in Southern States to avoid integration.

In a speech prepared for delivery on the Senate floor, the lawmaker from Lexington asked his colleagues if they could criticize a State's private school plans and at the same time support legislation beneficial to the predominantly Negro institution.

He cited in particular pending Senate Bill 3626, which would transfer Federally owned Freedman's Hospital to Howard University for use as a teaching hospital. The bill also would authorize use of Federal funds to expand the hospital, and provide for continuing annual appropriations.

"Is it not perfectly obvious that this proposal involves turning over Federal property and operating funds to a privately controlled institution which, although not required to do so by its charter, will carry on for the principal, if not the exclusive benefit of the colored race?" he demanded.

Parallel Claimed

He asked the Senate to consider the "parallel" between the Freedmen's transfer bill "and a bill which might be passed by the General Assembly of Virginia authorizing the transfer of title to certain public school properties to Boards of Trustees of nonprofit corporations established for the purpose of improving education and carrying on the training of children displaced by the closing of public schools."

Present indications are that the school segregation conflict will lead to the closing of public schools in some Virginia communities next fall, said Senator Robertson.

School officials who attempt to operate segregated schools in localities facing desegregation orders will be in contempt of Federal court, and those schools which admit white and colored pupils will be closed by Virginia law, he pointed out.

"Certainly no one, white or colored, will benefit from closed schools and if they cannot be operated in the future as they have been in the past some acceptable substitute means must be found for educating our youth," declared Senator Robertson.

Corporations Formed

Pro-segregationists in localities facing Federal court desegregation orders have formed corporations to educate children privately if public schools close. Nearby Arlington is one of the affected communities.

Senator Robertson asked why his State, if it wished, "should not be permitted to adopt for the benefit of its white children a plan which the Congress adopted 91 years ago for the benefit of colored students and has repeatedly affirmed by annual appropriations?"

"The plan to which I refer," he added, "is simply the giving of Government property and of Government funds to a private institution to carry on an educational program which the Government itself could not undertake."

Howard, he said, was established by an act of Congress after the Civil War when there was a need to provide education for recently freed slaves.

It is an independent educational institution, operating along the same lines as any privately endowed university, except that the trustees have to make annual reports to Congress, said Senator Robertson.

And while Howard's charter contains no racial restrictions, it operated as a segregated institution for many years and still has so few white students that "it can be considered integrated only in the technical sense," he declared.

Appropriations Listed

Since its establishment, said Senator Robertson, Howard has received $26 million in Federal funds for capital investment. Annual Federal appropriations for operating costs have risen to $4 million, or 54 per cent of the school's operating costs, he commented, noting that this amounts to approximately $1,000 per student.

"Why, then, if a Federal aid program is desirable, should not George Washington (University) share in the kind of grant proposed in S. 3636?" he inquired, adding:

"If members of the Senate approve of what has been done in regard to Howard University and Freedman's Hospital and are willing to repeat the process again through enactment of S. 3626, I frankly do not see how they could reasonably criticize a State which chose to turn over school properties to private corporations and to help those corporations carry on a program ofeducation."

Ike's '59 Budget Lists Cuts For Howard U. And Freedmen's Hospital

WASHINGTON. — (NNPA) — The Federal budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1, sent to Congress by President Eisenhower Monday, shows cuts for both Howard university and Freedmen's hospital.

The budget carries a total of $734,000 for Howard — $68.000 less than was appropriated for the current fiscal year. The appropriation for Freedmen's calls for $2,975,000 — $25,000 less than this year.

The difference between the estimate for the current fiscal year for Howard and the amount appropriated for the current fiscal year is due chiefly to a smaller sum proposed for the construction of buildings and an increase of $20,000 in the item for salaries and expenses.

An estimate of $4,000,000 was submitted as the Government's contribution for salaries and expenses, as compared with an appropriation of $3,800,000 for this purpose in the current fiscal year.

The total budget for salaries and expenses of the university amounts to $7,382,030, representing an increase of $272,030 over the current fiscal year.

The 1959 budget allots to general administration, $657,285; residence instruction and departmental research, $4,431,204; general library, $178,439; operation and maintenance of physical plant $991,381, and auxiliary enterprises and non-education expenses, $1,123,721.

Federal funds provide approximately 54.2 per cent of the operating costs of the university. The remainder comes from advancement and reimbursements from other accounts, $351,253, and from non-Federal sources — tuition, other student fees, gifts and grants, endowment income, and sales by auxiliary enterprises.

The dormitories, food service, bookstores, and athletic program included under auxiliary enterprises are intended to be self-supporting and render service at lowest possible cost.

The budget estimates also propose an appropriation of $171,000 for plans and specifications for a physical education building and a home economics building.

A master development plan and plans and specifications for 10 building projects have been authorized. Plans and specifications for a home economics building and a physical education building are underway.

The home economics building is to be completed and the physical education building is to be partially completed during the current calendar year.

Since 1945 the Federal Government has been financing a major construction program at Howard, which includes the erection of a number of new buildings and alterations and repairs to the existing physical plant.

Appropriations in the sum of $11,160,004 have been made to liquidate $12,754,804 in contract authority, leaving an estimated balance of $1,594,800 to be financed to the extent needed.

An apropriation of $163,000 is requested for the next fiscal year to liquidate a portion of the unfinanced contract authority for the men's dormitory which is to be completed next year.

The budget does not reveal how Freedmen's hospital plans to get an additional $76,000—whether by raising hospital rates, which are now almost prohibitive for low and middle-income people, or by an increased pay-patient load.

The hospital is financed by Federal appropriations and revenue from ay patients and payments from the District of Columbia and nearby counties in Maryland and Virginia for indigent patients.

Revenue from these sources is expected to total $41,216,000 for the current fiscal year. A total of $1,292,000 is expected from these sources in the next fiscal year. All of the increase is expected to come from pay patients.

Actual revenue from pay patients in the fiscal year ended June 30 totaled $822,562. It is expected to total $882,235 in the current fiscal year. The estimate for the next fiscal year is $898,225.

The general hospital consists of 350 beds and 50 bassinets. The tuburculosis hospital consists of 150 beds.

The average daily patient loads for 1959 are expected to be the same as they are in the current fiscal year — adults, 262; babies 33. and tuberculars, 52.

Lehman in Howard Talk Extols Negro Children

Herbert H. Lehman, former Democratic Senator from New York, said yesterday that the true heroes and heroines of this age are the Negro children who "have walked the gauntlet of hate and prejudice" to enter previously all-white schools.

He said that in all the cases he has heard about these children acted with grace and dignity.

The example of these young heroes and heroines should put to shame those timid men who say that we are moving too fast and have too little patience," Lehman declared.

Lehman spoke at exercises celebrating the 91st anniversary of Howard University.

Americans must find answers, Lehman said, to such questions as that posed by a teen-age Vietnamese girl to Alfred Friendly, managing editor of the The Washington Post.

Lehman noted that the girl asked Friendly if white Americans still think that black Americans are slaves.

"I hope that the day will come soon when we will be able to say to this girl and others that the evil conditions referred to no longer exist," Lehman said.

An honorary degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred on Lehman. Citations also were made to three Howard alumni —Dr. Julian Ross, Washington; Ruth Stephenson Norman, Charleston, W. Va., and Judge Scovel Richardson, New York.

The exercises were arranged by a committee of local graduates headed by Gladys D. Edmonson, 1928.

Colorful Ceremonies at J. C. Smith

Dr. Perry Inaugurated!

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE
(Courier Managing Editor)

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Johnson C. Smith University, flavored and aged with 91 years of history, unveiled all of its pomp and splendor here a week ago in inaugurating its seventh president—Dr. Rufus Patterson Perry, a tall, prematurely grey, 54-year-old scientist.

The colorful ceremonies, which included a half-hour-long processional, also paid fitting tribute to founders of the university, an affiliate of the Presbyterian Church.

Some will argue that Dr. Perry actually is the eighth president of J. C. Smith, basing their argument on the fact that Dr. J. W. Seabrook was appointed to serve as acting president during the school year of 1956-57 following the death of President Hardy Liston.

Dr. Blake

Dr. Brown

THE INAUGURAL attracted representatives and guests from more than 100 colleges and universities from all over the United States, and there to record the historical event for newspapers, radio and TV was a galaxy of writers and photographers. The flashing cameras throughout the ceremonies added an extra touch to the occasion.

Dr. Perry, born in Brunswick, Ga., in 1903, received the B.A. degree from Johnson C. Smith in 1925. He earned the M.S. and Ph.D. degrees at State University of Iowa. He taught chemistry and served as director of the Division of Arts and Sciences at Prairie View State College in Texas, and served as vice president, administrative dean and professor of chemistry at Langston University in Oklahoma before coming to J. C. Smith as president.

He was elected to the presidency of J. C. Smith in April, 1957. The previous year, he had been awarded the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws by his alma mater. A member of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), President Perry is a ruling elder, serving the J. C. Smith University Church.

IN HIS ACCEPTANCE speech, Dr. Perry elaborated on his beliefs and stated his aims and goals for J. C. Smith in the future. He stressed the fact that the university is preparing students for a way of living once they go into the outside world.

The inaugural ceremony opened with Dr. Perry being presented to the board of trustees by J. W. Smith, secretary of the board. The induction was conducted by Dr. Walter L. Moser, president of the board. The charge to Dr. Perry was given by Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, stated clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A.

Dr. Moser presided at the Founders Day program which preceded the inaugural ceremony. The Founders Day address was delivered by Kenneth I. Brown, executive director of the Danforth Foundation. Striking up a humorous mood, the Founders Day speaker advised President Perry to "enjoy your day in the sun, for it may rain tomorrow."

HE CALLED on President Perry and his faculty to teach and practice love, justice and goodwill at J. C. Smith. "The day lies ahead when justice will be given to all Americans by all Americans," he said. He told President Perry to "educate your students for a better tomorrow in order that the students may be better able to receive full justice when it does come."

Graduates and friends of the university began pouring on the campus at an early hour. Many of them remained after the morning ceremonies to attend the inaugural luncheon and for the presidential reception which followed later in the afternoon at the home of President and Mrs. Perry.

J. C. SMITH INSTALLS NEW PRESIDENT PERRY

CHARLOTTE, N. C. — Dr Rufus Patterson Perry was inaugurated as the eighth president of Johnson C. Smith University Monday, April 7.

The 54-year-old chemist formally became president of the 750-student university in an elaborate academic ceremony which also marked the 91st anniversary of the founding of Johnson C. Smith University—one of the state's major institutions of higher education for Negroes.

Representatives from more than one hundred and sixty colleges and universities, including most of the major eastern institutions, attended the inauguration and founders day ceremony in the University Church.

The charge of responsibility to Dr. Perry was given by Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, stated clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., with which the University is affiliated. Dr. W. L. Moser, president of the Board of Trustees presided at the ceremonies and conferred upon Dr. Perry the authority of president.

Dr. Kenneth I. Brown, executive director of the Danforth Foundation, earlier gave the Founders' Day address. He spoke of the need for quality in education, for a lack of concern about status among educators and for a specific definition of the purpose of education.

Johnson C. Smith University was founded in 1867 by the Rev. S. C. Alexander and W. L. Miller. It was first named Biddle Memorial Institute.

In 1876, the name of the school was changed to Biddle University, and in 1922 to Johnson C. Smith University. Now the only Presbyterian co-educational college for Negroes in the State, women were first admitted to the college in 1932 and in 1941, to the Freshman class.

Dr. Perry, a 1925 graduate of the university, became president last July after serving as professor of chemistry, vice president and administrative dean at Langston University, Langston, Okla.

Dr. Perry succeeds Dr. Hardy Liston who was president from 1947 until his death in October, 1956, and Dr. J. Ward Seabrook, president emeritus of Fayetteville State Teachers College, who was acting president until last July when the trustees unanimously selected Dr. Perry.

Ocala Negro College Gets Cabinet Nod

TALLAHASSEE, April 8 (UP)—The Cabinet today authorized a new state junior college for Negroes in Ocala and called for early sale of $2,900,000 in bonds for a branch state office building in Miami.

Sitting as a Board of Administration, the Cabinet approved the fiscal soundness of a proposed one-million-dollar bond issue to acquire right of way to four-lane U. S. Highway 1 south of St. Augustine and finance other road projects in the area.

The approval is subject to court validation of the bonds and a ruling on use of such bond proceeds for improvement of primary state highways.

Target date of June 15 was set for sale of the Development Commission bonds to build the state office building in Miami, similar to projects already authorized for Tampa and Winter Park to save rent now paid by state agencies for offices there.

The Cabinet Board of Education chose Ocala as the site for a new junior college for Negroes to serve Marion, Citrus and Levy counties. It will be located next door to the Ocala Negro High School and serve an estimated 245 students.

In other actions, the Cabinet:

Approved new leases for outpatient alcoholic treatment clinics in Jacksonville and Tampa.

Approved purchase at a net cost of $1,996 of a new air conditioned automobile for State Industrial Commission Chairman James T. Vocelle.

2 Colleges For Negroes Authorized

TALLAHASSEE July 22 (UPI) The Cabinet Board of Education today authorized establishment of junior colleges for Negroes in Panama City and Madison, which already have similar facilities for white students.

The new Panama City institution, to be located on the campus of Rosenwald High School, will open its doors this fall to an estimated 75 to 100 students. C. C. Washington, principal of Rosenwald, is expected to be named president.

The Madison junior college, which will serve 150 to 175 students from Madison, Taylor, Lafayette, Hamilton and Jefferson counties, will not open until September, 1959. It will be located adjacent to Madison Training School.

All counties to be served by the schools, except Jefferson, have agreed to help finance the operation. Only additional state funds in the first year will be $7,500 each to pay the presidents' salaries.

No capital outlay funds will be needed from the state in the initial stages beyond $9,500 already earmarked for each to plan facilities or buy equipment.

Kentucky State Gives Degrees To 82 Seniors

By HUGH MORRIS

The Courier-Journal Frankfort Bureau

Frankfort, Ky., June 1.—"America is great because all of us are here, and will be greater when every American is permitted to make his contribution to the common welfare."

So declared Dr. Archibald J. Carey, Jr., to 82 graduating seniors of Kentucky State College at its commencement convocation Sunday.

Courier-Journal

Louisville Ky.

Mar 6 2-58

Dr. Carey, pastor of Quinn Chapel A.M.E. Church in Chicago, is a former delegate from the United States to the United Nations General Assembly. He is now chairman of President Eisenhower's Committee on Government Employment Policies.

Double Standard Cited

Speaking to a packed house in Bell Gymnasium, Dr. Carey noted that for 3½ centuries this country has maintained a double standard of morality, and that for 250 years there was human slavery.

"Although we have abolished slavery, it has been continued through discrimination," he declared.

Quoting from the Declaration of Independence, the Federal Constitution, and the Pledge of Allegiance, Dr. Carey observed that no other nation has set for itself nobler ideals.

Changes Taking Place

But he said changes are taking place—gratifying changes—that are moving the nation toward elimination of the double standard. He cited progress along these lines in the armed forces, in housing, and in public education.

"America is slowly changing and the face of our society is becoming more nearly like the ideals of our founding fathers," he said.

Why is this so? Dr. Carey said that for one thing, this is a smaller world, transportation is more rapid, communications are better.

"This may not make men brothers, but it sure makes them neighbors."

Further, the "so-called white powers" today find it expedient to make alliances with some of the colored peoples of the world to strengthen their defenses.

Says Attitudes Shifted

"Because we have had to look some of these colored peoples in the eyes abroad, we have had to revise our attitudes at home," Dr. Carey declared.

Also contributing to the change is the work of "movements and men of good will" which, although small by themselves, have in the aggregate made themselves felt.

And, Dr. Carey added, minorities have given an excellent account of themselves whenever they have been permitted to enter the arena of endeavor. He cited examples in literature, diplomacy, sports, and other fields where American Negroes have made outstanding contributions.

President Praised

Further, leadership provided from the White House by Presidents Roosevelt, Truman, and Eisenhower have played a major part.

"President Eisenhower has done more to implement and improve the lot of the Negro in America than any President since Abraham Lincoln," Dr. Carey asserted.

Last of all, he added, the "sheer courage of hundreds of Negro Americans who are literally living through an age of hell and terror so that unborn generations may be free."

What can the graduating Negro senior do about this?

"You must match the competition of the best. This is a new age. Integration is replacing segregation. This means we are in competition with the best," Dr. Carey said.

Must 'Alert America'

"Let the quality of excellence characterize our performance, whether it is on the production line, in our neighborhoods, in our communities."

Secondly, the speaker said, the graduates must alert America to the fact that every American can make a contribution to the common welfare.

And last, "hold high your own ideals—for yourselves, for your people, for your nation."

Eight seniors graduated "with distinction": Cleopal Burton, Scottsville; Roger Conwell, Jr., Louisville; Bessie Louise Johnson, Owensboro; Valinda Elizabeth Lewis and Anna Elizabeth Mabson, both of Lexington; Geneva Scott, Maysville; Marcia Jo Howard, Indianapolis, and Joyce Elizabeth Williams, Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Class of 1908 Honored

Honored by President R. B. Atwood as members of the 50-year-club were those attending members of the Class of 1908: James Muir, Cincinnati; A. W. Montgomery, Chicago; Mrs. Juanita Morgan Robinson, Chicago; Mrs. Grace Buckner, Cincinnati, and Mrs. Julia Allen Colerane, Winchester.

Also honored upon her retirement as associate professor emeritus in business administration was Mrs. Cee Vee Smith, who was presented with a bound book of letters from faculty friends and well-wishers.

Trouble At Langston

Oklahoma's only colored university, Langston, is under legislative fire.

The reason: Its student enrollment has dropped from a 1943 high of 835 to its present low of 601.;

Its annual operating costs are too high averaging $1,000 per student, and

Charges have been made that the school is being mis-managed.

In order to find out if any suspicion could be justly directed toward the school's president, Dr. G. L. Harrison, a committee has directed him to submit his personal income tax returns for the last four years to determine how he acquired property in Lawton, Okla., Chicago and Cincinnati.

The enrollment at Langston is declining, but is increasing at integrated University of Oklahoma and Oklahoma A. and M.

Statistics show Langston's loss of students began in 1948, the year the University of Oklahoma opened its doors to all citizens.

Per capita student costs are higher because of the decline in enrollment.

If there's been financial mismanagement at Langston, the legislation could discover it easier by auditing the school's accounts than by looking at the president's personal income tax returns.

Langston University May Be On Last Leg

LANGSTON university is doomed if state regents for higher education carry out their sentiments.

Tuesday, there appeared little doubt that the first step in elimination of the all-Negro university will be to cut it down to junior college status. The reason: It's drawing too few students since former all-white colleges started accepting Negro students.

John Rogers, chairman of the regents board, said he is ready to recommend that Langston be converted to a junior college beginning in the autumn of 1959.

Needed to Cut Costs

He sees it as necessary in an overall effort to reduce higher education costs in schools which have such a low student load their annual per-student cost is far out of line.

"I'm ready to recommend we convert it next biennium to a junior college, and on down the line completely eliminate it," Rogers told the regents in discussing Langston in the capitol.

Several other regents agreed with him, and there was talk about recommending to the legislature next year that some schools with high per-student loads be "wiped out."

"If you're going to make any changes in these colleges, you ought to tell them and not wait until the last minute and tear them all to pieces," warned Guy M. Harris, Ardmore member of the board.

Budget Time

It was explained there would be plenty of warning if the board decides to recommend cutting back or closing any of the high-cost schools.

Such recommendation would follow preparation of the schools' budgets for the two-year period beginning July 1, 1959. It is for that period that the legislature will appropriate when it meets next January.

Rogers, re-elected to another year as board chairman, named three schools he said were too expensive if the board is to be justified in asking taxpayers for more money to operate and build for the 18 institutions of higher education.

'Why Are We Here'

"We can't have programs like we have at Langston, Warner and Claremore, with per capita costs at $1,000, and expect the people to give us more money," Rogers said.

Harris observed that "if this board can't take the lead, why are we here."

The discussion then moved into talk of eliminating some of the high-cost schools if their budgets cannot be pared or their student load increased to reduce the per-student cost.

Funds Needed

The board ordered its staff to make detailed studies of possible economies in the entire system, with particular emphasis on the high-cost schools.

"Realizing that additional funds must be provided if Oklahoma institutions are to be placed on a comparable basis with similar institutions in surrounding states," the regents said in a prepared statement, "regents want to be certain that there are no funds which might not be achieving the proper results at the present time before the legislature is asked to provide the additional funds."

The board approved a yardstick by which its administrative staff will measure the budget requests of the schools for the next biennium. It was qualified by the board's right to revise the budget of any particular institution if necessary.

Dorms Not Filled

Rogers speculated on the high per-student cost of such schools as Oklahoma College for Women at Chickasha and Oklahoma Military academy at Claremore.

"There probably is a trend away from girls' schools as well as boys' schools," he said. "The dormitories are not up to capacity."

"Generally(he commented, Oklahoma's higher education system is "in good shape."

Regents, he said, are particularly concerned with the percentage of available funds going into faculty salaries. Oklahoma faculties suffer losses to other states which pay more.

Letter from Regent Head Says Institution Is Doing Good Job In Field of Higher Education

Rumors that Langston university is about to close were killed this week when a letter to Dr. G. L. Harrison, president, was made public this week. The letter was from M. A. Nash of the Oklahoma State Regents for Higher Education. The communication praised the institution for the work it has done in the past and the long tradition for which it stands. It cited the fact that the university is accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and is one of seventeen Negro Land-Grant institutions in the United States.

"Langston university is one of the State's oldest educational institutions and has rendered valuable and outsctanding services to the state. The institution is accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and is one of seventeen Negro land-grant institutions in the United States.'

How Powerful Is a Letter?

This One Upset College Campus and City Bosses

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—Trustees of LeMoyne College buckled on their shields and sallied forth in defense of a fellow-member whose resignation had been demanded in a controversial letter from a student.

The letter in question, written by one Marion S. Barry, kicked up such a fuss among LeMoyne's hierarchy that one can well believe that the pen is mightier than the sword.

Remarks made by Walter Chandler, former mayor of Memphis, before a segregation hearing in Federal Court precipitated the squabble. Mr. Barry, after learning of the remarks, addressed a letter to President Hollis Price in LeMoyne's student newspaper, The Magician, in which Mr. Chandler's statements were considered as "humiliating and embarrassing."

AMONG THE things that Chandler had said, as he represented the city of Memphis at the hearings, was "The public welfare will not be served by changing the status and the Negro sitting on the front seat of the bus. On the contrary, the progress of the Negro will be set back seriously and the public safety and health may be seriously jeopardized. And all the testimony in the record is to the effect that it will be jeopardized. And while the police may say that they can handle this matter, they cannot promise to do it, because it may get out of hand and they may be loss of life."

It just so happens that young Mr. Barry is president of the LeMoyne College chapter of the NAACP, and his comments on Mr. Chandler's remarks did not go unnoticed by the Press-Scimitar and the Commercial-Appeal, local dailies.

These papers printed Barry's charges, which included such statements as " . . . Mr. Chandler's resignation should be requested immediately. Either that or the LeMoyne faculty should begin teaching the importance of second-class citizenship."

But, Mr. Chandler had also said, "And so much of the Negroes' advancement here lies deeper than the front seat on the bus. It lies in the development of higher moral standards of living, in good conduct, in the elimination of slums in which the Negro lives, the eradication of diseases which undermine them mentally and physically and in the realization that he, the Negro, has the responsibilities of citizenship which he cannot avoid with impunity."

After conferring, these gentlemen announced that Barry's letter was not only "impertinent" but was also "ill advised." The group also charged that the letter failed to "provide facts on which the conclusions it reached were based."

ferred to testimony given by former Mayor Walter Chandler two months ago in federal court in a bus segregation case. Chandler is now a trustee of LeMoyne.

The trustee board, in discussing the letter, said:

"The views expressed in the published letter and the views of campus organizations do not reflect the views of the administration and trustees of LeMoyne college... The letter was impertinent, ill advised, and did not provide facts on which the conclusions it reached were based."

The letter appeared in the student publication, The Magician. According to Barry, he had been approached by the paper's editor for permission to publish the letter and had told the editor to exercise his own discretion. Barry said the letter was given to Dr. Hollis Price, president of LeMoyne, with no intention of its being published.

Besides Dr. Price, other Negro members of the board are Dr. S. A. Owen, T. R. McLemore and J. E. Walker.

LeMoyne Board Calls Letter Impertinent

MEMPHIS. — (ANP) — The student letter asking removal of a LeMoyne college trustee for statements "insulting" to Negroes, brought a reply this week from the school's trustee board criticizing the letter as "impertinent and ill advised."

The letter was written by Marion Shepilovk Barry, president of the college NAACP chapter, and re-

LeMoyne's Budget Sets New Record

$319,000 Is $19,000 Higher Than Last Year

Trustees of LeMoyne College adopted a record $319,000 budget yesterday at their annual meeting at the college.

Dr. Hollis Price, president, said the new budget, a $19,000 increase over last year's, will provide faculty pay increases, more library money and pay the cost of LeMoyne's new public relations director and alumni secretary, B. M. Ratcliffe.

John W. Johnson of Chicago, publisher of four Negro magazines (Ebony, Jet, Hue and Tan) was elected to a three-year term as a trustee, succeeding Dr. Philip Bradley of Syracuse, N.Y.

Dr. Bradley is now teaching in India.

Edwin Dalstrom of 905 Kensington Place was elected vice chairman of the trustees, succeeding Dr. J. E. Walker, who died earlier this year.

$25,000 Is Needed At LeMoyne College

Appeal Issued To Meet Current Operating Expenses

An appeal was issued yesterday for gifts totaling $25,000 to meet the current operating expenses of LeMoyne College for Negroes at Sol Walker.

C. Arthur Bruce, campaign chairman, pointed out that 80 per cent of Negro school teachers in Memphis and Shelby County are graduates of LeMoyne.

"LeMoyne merits your generous support," he said. "Its objective is to assist the Negro through education to help himself."

He said LeMoyne graduates also "constitute a large percentage of the doctors, nurses, dentists, lawyers, ministers and others in the professional and semi-professional fields of service in our Negro community."

The chairman said that a local gift to LeMoyne "actually increases in returns to the college." This is because the 87-year-old school is affiliated with the United Negro College Fund, which each year provides matching funds for private Negro colleges.

The fund adds $50 to each $100 local gift to LeMoyne.

MEMPHIS HAD SHARE IN GRANTS BY FORD

Colleges And Hospitals Received Funds

Two colleges and eight hospitals here shared in grants of 83 million dollars by the Ford Foundation last year.

LeMoyne College received $45,500 and Southwestern $112,000 during the period from Oct. 1, 1956, to Sept. 30, 1957, the Foundation reported.

The payments were toward total grants of $85,500 for LeMoyne and $227,000 for Southwestern.

Memphis hospitals also fared well in the distribution of funds. The hospitals and the amounts they received are:

Collins Chapel Correctional Hospital, $25,700; Crippled Children's Hospital School, $11,150; Hospital for Crippled Adults, $11,150; Le Bonheur Children's Hospital, $15,560; Memphis Eye-Ear, Nose and Throat Hospital, $13,850; Methodist Hospital, $89,650; St. Joseph, $77,500 and Baptist Memorial Hospital, $125,000.

The Foundation's money was earmarked for privately supported institutions.

Ouster Of Trustee Chandler Sought By LeMoyne NAACP

A demand that Walter Chandler, veteran member of the board of trustees of LeMoyne College, be removed from that post has been made by the LeMoyne Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The demand that Mr. Chandler, attorney and former mayor, either resign or be ousted was made in a letter to Dr. Hollis Price, president of the college. The request was made because Mr. Chandler acted as special counselor for the city during a Federal Court trial involving segregation on Memphis Street Railway Co. buses.

Marion Shepilovk Barry, president of the NAACP chapter, wrote the letter. LeMoyne College is a Negro institution.

'Duty As A Lawyer'

Mr. Chandler said yesterday he had not received a copy of the letter "but I assume one will be sent to me."

"As an attorney at law," he said, "it is my duty to represent my clients to the best of my ability. I have no apologies to make for my part in the bus integration suit in Federal court."

A decision in the suit, filed by a Negro postal worker and prosecuted by NAACP attorneys, is pending.

The letter to Dr. Price was printed this week in the LeMoyne student publication called Magician.

The letter said that "you are no doubt aware of what we consider the disgraceful stand taken by one of the members of our board of trustees at the bus segregation trial last Jan. 6. We refer to the position taken by Walter Chandler who made insulting remarks about the Negro race on that occasion.

"His shocking statements not only had little legal bearing on the case but were some of the biggest monuments to demagoguery that we have yet seen constructed. His conduct showed a complete lack of good will and probably has had a devastating effect on race relations in this city."

Has Supported School

The letter said the NAACP members felt that "it is humiliating and embarrassing that such an obvious demagogue should have such direct connection with our college."

But we feel that this in itself does not excuse his actions," the letter said. "Nor do we believe that his dismissal would have any serious effect on the financial status of this institution. Mr. Chandler's resignation should be requested immediately. Either that, or the LeMoyne faculty should begin teaching the importance of second-class citizenship."

Dr. Price was out of the city yesterday.

The Magician, in printing the letter, carried this explanation:

"It should be kept in mind that the views expressed in the letter do not necessarily represent the views of the Magician staff and advisors, but in maintaining our policy of printing news unbiasedly, here is the NAACP letter."

College Rated Highly

LeMoyne, which occupies a block on Walker between Neptune and McDowell, is a private college depending for its support on contributions and endowments. It is a four-year school and one of five Negro colleges sponsored by the American Missionary Association, a branch of the Congregational Christian Church.

The college has an A rating from the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, the highest rating it gives.

Other members of the board are: C. Arthur Bruce, Edwin Dalstrom, Charles F. Goodman, T. R. McLemore, S. A. Owen and J. E. Walker, all of Memphis; Philips Bradley of Syracuse, N. Y.; Truman B. Douglass of New York; Eva Hills Eastman of Scarsdale, N. Y.; George Forbes of Cleveland, Ohio; Philip M. Widenhouse of New York, and William F. Frazier of New York.

The board is scheduled to meet here Tuesday.

LeMoyne Board Decries Attack On Chandler

LeMoyne College trustees scored a student's letter demanding resignation of former Mayor Walter Chandler from the board as "impertinent and ill advised."

The statement was released by Truman B. Douglass of New York, executive vice president of the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Churches, after a day-long meeting at the home of Dr. Hollis Price, LeMoyne president. The Congregational churches underwrite most of LeMoyne expenses.

Mr. Douglass said the statement reflected the "unanimous view of the trustees." The letter was written by a leader of the campus chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The letter to Dr. Price from Marion Shepilovk of the campus NAACP, termed Mr. Chandler's court statement as "insulting" to the Negroes. It demanded his removal or resignation from the board.

NAACP Attack On Chandler Decried By LeMoyne Board

By REESE WELLS

LeMoyne College trustees yesterday scored a student's letter demanding resignation of former Mayor Walter Chandler from the board as "impertinent and ill advised."

The statement was released by Truman B. Douglass of New York, executive vice president of the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Churches, after a day-long meeting at the home of Dr. Hollis Price, LeMoyne president.

The Congregational churches underwrite most of LeMoyne expenses.

Mr. Douglass said the statement reflected the "unanimous view of the trustees." The letter was written by a leader of the campus chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Not Trustees' View

"The views expressed in the published letter and the views of campus organizations do not reflect the views of the administration and trustees of LeMoyne College any more than does a letter to the editor express the views of a daily newspaper," the statement read.

"The letter was impertinent, ill advised and did not provide facts on which the conclusions it reached were based."

Mr. Chandler, who received a copy of the statement from C. Arthur Bruce, board chairman, said yesterday he is undecided as to whether he will resign anyway.

"I don't know about that," he said. "I haven't given it any more thought."

He added: "When you get into a situation like this you want to get out."

Mr. Chandler repeated his previous statement that he has no apology to make to LeMoyne students concerning his statements in a Federal Court bus segregation hearing Jan. 6.

Edwin Dalstrom, another member of the board, has said if Mr. Chandler resigns he will follow.

Resignation Demanded

The letter to Dr. Price from Marion Shepilovk Barry of 922 Latham, president of the campus NAACP, termed Mr. Chandler's court statements as "insulting" to the Negroes. It demanded his removal or resignation from the board.

The letter called Mr. Chandler's position in the lawsuit "a disgraceful stand" and said his "shocking statements not only had little legal bearing on the case but were some of the biguery that we have yet seen onstructed."

It was published in a new student publication, The Magician.

The campus NAACP head said the letter was given to Dr. Price with no intention of publication. He said he was approached by the editor of the mission to publish the letter and to him to exercise his own discretion.

Statement of Board

The trustees said yesterday it is their policy to recognize views of individuals. Their complete statement follows:

"The trustees of LeMoyne College in annual session today discussed a letter published in The Magician, a student publication, calling for the resignation of a member of the board. The letter addressed to the president of the college was signed by a student in his capacity as president of a campus organization.

"The views expressed in the published letter and the views of campus organizations do not reflect the views of the administration and trustees of LeMoyne College any more than does a 'letter to the editor' express the views of a daily newspaper. The letter was impertinent, ill advised, and did not provide facts on which the conclusion it reached were based.

"The board of trustees has always allowed academic freedom, freedom of speech, and freedom of the press to the faculty and students in accordance with the best democratic practices under our American Constitution. The trustees also recognize that the views of the individual members of the board of trustees do not reflect the views of the college. The trustee has freedom of speech, freedom of action, and freedom in the exercise of his vocation.

Principles Outlined

"LeMoyne College is dedicated to the education of young people within the principle of the brotherhood of man under the fatherhodo of God. It has felt it more fruitful to practice this principle and to preach it as occasion offered rather than condemn those who differ. It has sought to communicate its ideals and to inspire rather than coerce their acceptance. It has enjoyed and valued the support of many who did not fully agree with its interpretation of those ideals.

"LeMoyne College has served the youth of the Memphis community for 48 years. During this long period of service the aims and purposes of the institution have not varied. It has always sought to educate young people to be responsible citizens and to dedicate themselves to the task of building a community in which all men can live together in mutual trust and harmony."

In other action the board approved a $309,000 budget—up $13,000 from last year.

Dr. Price said the increase would be more faculty pay and to employ a professor of French and German.

The board will meet again June 2, to elect officers.

UNFC Allots $10,395 To Lincoln U

Lincoln University, Pa. — An allocation of $10,395 has been received by Lincoln University from the United Negro College Fund, according to Lincoln's Acting President A. O. Grubb.

"Lincoln University is one of the 33 independent accredited member colleges and universities of the Fund," Dr. Grubb said. "UNCF coordinates their efforts in seeking nation-wide public and corporate support.

"Beginning with its first organized appeal in 1944, UNCF has raised approximately 10 per cent of the annual operating expenses of its member colleges each year. The November 1958 allocation brings UNCF's appropriations to Lincoln University for the current calendar year to $32,786."

As the pioneer in cooperative fund-raising for institutions of higher learning, the College Fund set a pattern. Some 40 organizations are now conducting joint appeals annually for groups of American private colleges.

Stanley C. Hope, president of Sound-Scriber Corporation nd retired president of Esso Standard Oil Company, is national chairman for UNFC's 1958 appeal.

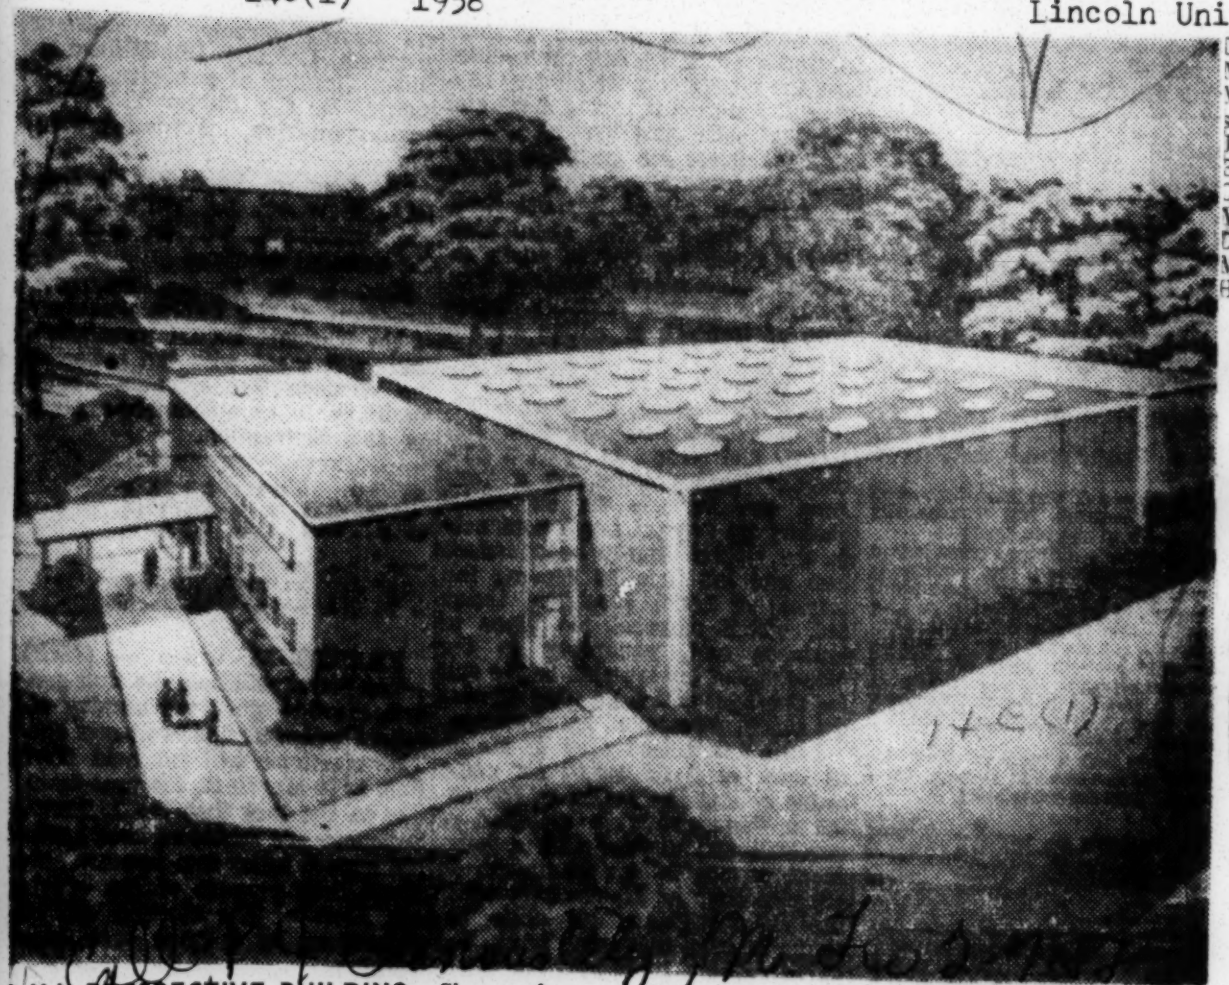
Lincoln University (JEFFERSON CITY, MO.)



L.U.'s PROSPECTIVE BUILDING.—Shown above is the new $700,000 Health and Physical Education building which will soon be under construction on the campus at Lincoln university. In addition to the most-up-to-date facilities for teaching instruction, the building will contain a gymnasium with a seating capacity for 1700 persons.

Lincoln University To Construct A $700,000 Gymnasium Building

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — The Lincoln university Board of Curators, through its president, Dr. Earl E. Dawson, has announced that theiplans and specifications for the erection of a new gymnasium building on the Lincoln university campus in Jefferson City are completed and that bids will be advertised for as soon as funds are made available from the $75,000,000 Bond Issue. Release of plans for bids is anticipated within the next two months.

The structure, designed by the Office of Marcel Boulenault, Architects-Engineers of St. Louis, will be of contemporary design; however, moderated to harmonize with existing buildings. The structure, which will cost approximately $700,000.00, has been planned to permit the future addition of two wings to house an all season swimming pool and facilities for a ROTC unit which is contingent to the University. The most modern facilities for the training of physical education and athletic competition are incorporated in the proposed building which will permit the University teams to compete on a college level with other Universities.

The building consists of a large gymnasium two stories high with a capacity of 1900 spectators. The gym area can be divided into two separate teaching stations by means of an electrically operated folding partition. The gym will be surrounded on three sides by a two story structure, the first floor of which will contain a large entrance lobby, large women's and men's locker and dressing rooms, a visiting team room, a varsity room, first aid room, and secondary room facilities. The second floor will contain staff offices, three classrooms, a large tumbling room and a large general purpose room which can also be used for a recreational room by the students.

The exterior walls will be of masonry with aluminum windows and stone trim and the entire structure will be of fireproof construction.

Lincoln University established in 1866 is approaching its century anniversary. Currently the main campus occupies fifty-two acres of beautifully landscaped slopes and flat lands which overlook much of the city. Three farms of 522 acres devoted to agricultural instruction make up another aspect of the University grounds. Academic work at the University is accredited by the North Central Association on the high school, undergraduate college and graduate levels through the master's degree.

Planning of the building has been developed with the active participation and co-operation of Dr. Dawson, President of the University; Head coach, Mr. Dwight Reed and members of the physical education staff, and the consulting firm of Engelhardt, Engelhardt, Leggett and Cornell of New York. As a result of this co-operation, a most modern and complete structure when completed will provide the University with top level competitive athletic facilities.

Members of the Board of Curators for Lincoln University are: Dr. H. Byron Masterson, Kennett, Mo.; Dr. J. D. Elliff, Columbia, Mo.; Mr. Thomas A. Webster, Kansas City, Mo.; Mr. George Rozier, Jefferson City, Mo.; Mr. John O. Bond, Jefferson City, Mo.; Mrs. Olive Decatur, Springfield, Mo.; Mr. Carl G. Stifel, St. Louis, Mo.; Dr. August T Piper, St. Louis, Mo.; and Mr. George Roberts, Hannibal, Mo.

Unwilling College Head Visits Here

Former President Calvin Coolidge is credited with originating the often repaeted ultimatum: "If nominated I will not run; if elected, I will not serve."

But there are few who have actually had the opportunity to live up to this threat.

One such person was in Chicago this week. He is not a politician, but an educator.

He is erudite Dr. Ambrose Caliver, of Washington, assistant to the U. S. Commissioner of Education, and chief of the adult education section.

Some years ago, Dr. Caliver was approached with an offer to become president of Lincoln university in Missouri. He was, as anyone would be, flattered by the offer, but indicated that he could not serve.

But his supporters ignored him, probably feeling that his rejection of the offer was simple modesty. They proposed his name to the trustees of the institution and he was duly elected president.

Informed of the action, he reiterated his position. Though elected president, he never assumed office, and subsequently another president was elected.

Dr. Caliver was in Chicago to meet with an exploratory committee to develop plans for a program of humanities education for labor unions.

Dr. Caliver who has served with the U. S. education department for 27 years initially was appointed as a specialist in the education of Negroes. Currently, his job crosses racial lines and is concerned with the education of all adults.

The meeting he attended at the LaSalle hotel here was sponsored by the National Institute of Labor Education with headquarters in Madison, Wis., and the Center for Education in the Humanities for Industry of Amherst, Mass.

The eight-man committee which at the two-day session was headed by Dr. Max Goldberg, chairman of the department of English of the University of Massachusetts.

Dr. Caliver said that adult education is perhaps the most essential phase of education today because of the rapidity with which conditions are changing. "Adults need to be helped to keep abreast of things. Lifelong learning is absolutely essential," he declared.

His other interest in Chicago was to have conferences with educators and key persons in connection with the program for the National Commission for Adult Literacy.

Dr. Caliver pointed out that illiteracy is another national problem cutting across racial lines.

Dedicate Million Dollar Fine Arts Center At Lincoln University

Four Daughters Of Clement Richardson Attend Ceremony

(By A CALL Staff Writer)

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — Approximately 800 persons attended the dedication Sunday of the million-dollar Clement Richardson Auditorium and Fine Arts building on the Lincoln university campus.

The building, erected at a cost of $1,300,000, includes an auditorium with a seating capacity of 1,400 and classrooms for the study of art, music and drama.

The assembled crowd heard Dr. Philip J. Hickey, superintendent of instruction in the St. Louis public schools, characterize Lincoln university as a school "with a long and distinguished history, marked with the courage, fortitude and perseverance of its founders."

Tracing the growth of the school from its founding as a land grant college in 1789, through the development of the arts and sciences college, the introduction of the law and graduate schools, and the addition of its journalism school in 1943, Hickey pointed to 1954 as the most significant date in the school's history.

Praise For Missourians

"In September of that year you opened your doors for the first time to all qualified students without regard to race.

"You have found here that men of goodwill find solutions to even the most pressing and difficult problems," Hickey said.

Without enunciating other sections of the country where integration has not proceeded so smoothly, the speaker, nonetheless drew instant applause when he declared that "the people of Missouri accept the laws of the federal government and the decisions of the Supreme court."

Referring directly to the need for the new building, Hickey spoke of the place of fine arts in the college curriculum.

"An appreciation for the fine arts is not essential for making a living, but it is essential to a liberal education," he said.

"Ours is an age which will demand an unlimited investment in education. The goals of the colleges and universities are to make young people aware and competent intellectually; to make them secure emotionally and to make them discerning and discriminating culturally," he said.

"No Hope In TV"

"Where else," he asked, "except in the universities can one get an appreciation of music, art and drama? Certainly little can be expected from the movies, radio and television."

The speaker was mildly critical of the current emphasis on scientific studies in the nation's schools.

Since the advent of Sputnik, he said, critics of American education have been loud and vehement in their insistence on more scientific training. Until now, he added parenthetically, many of these critics, had held no interest in the problems of education.

But, he emphasized, educators throughout the years have held out for a balance between science and the humanistic studies.

Human Relations Basic

"Any program of human relations is just as basic as the study of nuclear fission," Hickey declared.

The speaker was introduced by Earl E. Dawson, president of the university, who also presided at the program.

"Dedications," Dr. Dawson said, "are a means of giving honor to the farsighted men who labored to promote the purposes of the institution."

He described the late Clement Richardson as one such man. "It is particularly fitting that the building housing the area of fine arts at Lincoln university should be named for former President Clement Richardson. During his administration from 1918 to 1922, he initiated many programs which led both to an improved and to a more effective institution," Dawson said.

His Work Cited

Among these changes were the expansion and implementation of the agriculture and industrial arts areas of the institution through increased expenditures for farm lands and equipment; the introduction of medical service as necessary for the sanitation and well-being of the student body; the introduction of military training as a factor in the school curricula, and the acquisition of land for the establishment of an athletic field."

It was during Richardson's tenure also that the school achieved university status, resulting in a broader and richer curricula offering, Dawson pointed out.

After leaving Lincoln, Richardson served as president of Western college in Kansas City 1922-27), as president of Kansas Vocational school (1927-37), and as president of Western Baptist Seminary in Kansas City (1937-49). It was while serving in the last capacity that he died on December 25, 1949.

Four Daughters Present

Among the honored guests at the hour and a half ceremony were the four daughters of the late educator. Sharing the platform with political and educational leaders and a former governor were Mrs. W. O. Nixon, Mrs. J. M. Moore and Mrs Girard T. Bryant of Kansas City and Mrs. A. S. Jackson of St. Louis.

Speaking briefly, for herself and her sisters, Mrs. Bryant said, "It is a pleasure to be here to see honor done to a man who worked so hard and so diligently for this school."

Other special guests included Forrest Smith, former governor; Hubert Wheeler, state commissioner of education; M. E. Morris, state treasurer; Senator John E. Johnson, of the 24th Congressional district; W. Francis English, dean of the college of arts and sciences at M. U.; Haskell Holman, state auditor, representing the governor, and Dr. H. Byron Masterson, chairman, and Judge Carl R. Johnson of Kansas City, Mrs. Olive J. Decatur, and John O. Bond, members of the board of curators.

Ovation For Scruggs

An extremely popular platform guest was Dr. Sherman D. Scruggs, former president of the university, who resigned several years ago because of illness. Dr. Scruggs received a standing ovation from the crowd, many of whom were alumni whose undergraduate years were spent during his tenure.

Dr. Scruggs, introduced by President Dawson as "the man who fought so long and so hard in the state legislature" to get the appropriations which made the fine arts center possible, described the occasion as an "honor to those who have gone before and a challenge to those now present."

Dr. Scruggs now lives in Kansas City, Kas.

N. C. Education Leader Becomes College Head

By CHARLES CLAY.

"Many schools in North Carolina are better because of his influence."

That's a high compliment. It was paid to Dr. S. E. Duncan by Dr. Charles F. Carroll, State superintendent of public instruction.

North Carolina's public school leaders agree that it's richly deserved.

Set apart from his colleagues in the Education Building on Edenton Street, Dr. Duncan has worked for the past 12 years to improve the educational opportunities of North Carolina's Negro children.

On July 1, he will leave his East Hargett Street office and the concentration of Negro professional people there to become president of Livingston College at Salisbury.

"If I've had any success at all, it's because I've stayed out of the spotlight except when I had to get in it," Dr. Duncan said of his work for the State. "I've looked at it as a cooperative enterprise where leadership has to be stimulated on the local level."

As State supervisor of public instruction for Negro high schools, Dr. Duncan works through North Carolina's Negro school principals.

A statistic which is significant to Dr. Duncan's purpose shows that the turnover of Negro principals in North Carolina is about four per cent each year. His chief aim has been to make the principals leaders in their communities and it takes time to gain the respect of a community.

In this connection, he points to a danger in the present trend for school consolidation.

"It's impractical to use the same criteria for the consolidation of Negro schools that are used in the consolidation of other schools," he said. "When you take our school out of a small community, there's nothing left. You take the heart out of it. I've never felt we couldn't have good high schools with 300 students in them."

In the course of making various studies which have done much to build his reputation as an educator, Dr. Duncan has come up with some significant facts not widely known.

"More than 90 per cent of all our so-called Negro high schools are really union schools, with one or more elementary grades in them," he said, "and better than 50 per cent of all Negro elementary pupils are in these union schools under high school principals."

Of the 228 schools, 167 have less than 300 students.

Of the integration crisis in the South, Dr. Duncan said:

"Fortunately, there has been no widespread emphasis upon the differential in educational achievement between groups in North Carolina. This is good, because to focus our attention upon differences in achievement between the white children of the North and the white children of the South, between urban children and rural children, rich children and poor children, Negro children and white children would form the basis for the deterioriation of public school education in North Carolina. I really believe that."

DR. S. E. DUNCAN

He has hopes for less difficulty in North Carolina than in some other states:

"As far as I'm concerned, the State made a step in the right direction when it integrated high schools in Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Greensboro last fall. I do not foresee some of the results that are envisioned for some of the other states because I believe that the leadership of both races in North Carolina is committed to the maintenance of law and order."

Challenge at Livingston.

Dr. Duncan looks upon his job at Livingston as a challenge. "It's also a matter of going back to serve an institution which had so much to do with my preparation for the work I've been doing," he said.

He attended high school and college at Livingston and later took an M.A. and a Ph.D. from Cornell University. His father once taught at Livingston before his death in 1931.

A three-letter man in college, Dr. Duncan still plays a good game of tennis.

Before taking his job with the State in 1946, Dr. Duncan taught in Reidsville, was a principal in East Spencer and returned to Reidsville as supervising principal of Negro schools.

Among other positions he now holds, he is a member of the National Committee on the Education of Negroes sponsored by the U. S. Office of Education and North Carolina co-director of the National Assn. of Biology Teachers Conservation Project.

Dr. Duncan is a past president of the Assn. of Colleges and Secondary schools and has served as visiting professor at a number of institutions, including Tuskegee Institute and the University of Miami.

He's married to the former Ida Hauser and they have two children, a daughter who's attending Livingston and a son who finishes high school this year at Reidsville.

Dr. Duncan returned the compliment paid him. "I've had the utmost cooperation from the Department of Public Instruction They've given me tremendous assistance," he said.

On June 7 at Ligon School here some 250 Negro school principals will gather to pay tribute to Dr Duncan.

Tribute To An Educator; Challenge To Successor

Trent To Duncan

IN ITS 80 years of consecrated service to the Christian religion and sterling citizenship, Livingstone College has had only five duty elected presidents.

The newest, Dr. S. E. Duncan, has just been welcomed to his tenure succeeding interim-President, J. H. Brockett who had been efficiently filling the breach after Dr. W. J. Trent had been named President-Emeritus on his retirement last year from a 32-year career as the college's chief executive.

Prior to Dr. Trent, there had been only founder Joseph C. Price, Rev. W. H. Goler, and Dr. David C. Suggs to occupy the president's chair.

That Livingstone is and has been an institution of extraordinary stability and steadfastness of service and purpose could ask no better proof than this. That Dr. Trent remains President Emeritus after more than 3 decades of continuous tenure is companion proof that even the foment and turmoil of the educational world within the past quarter century have failed to agitate Livingstone with its tremors or beguile it into novelty and departures.

Yet in the increased tempo of its physical growth, the broadening of its curriculum, and the added stature of its faculty Livingstone, under Dr. Trent, has marched with the times, has approximated the general advances of its immediate environment, and has introduced the modern into the traditional at measured pace.

Dr. Duncan has stepped into a pair of big shoes; the shoes of a leader who, while epitomizing the spiritual dedication of a church-related institution to the unstinted admiration and applause of his colleagues in the educational world, and meriting the respect and veneration of his fellow-townsmen, has headed a regime which has seen the local college win approximately a half million dollars more from the nationwide United Negro College Fund, than has been donated to that fund from the local area.

It is well that the new president himself a Livingstone product, generously qualified by accomplishment of his own distinction of a number of his kin in the educational sphere, is prepared to continue the college administration at the high level with which it is long familiar, and with full acceptance of responsibility already defined and exemplified.

President Duncan takes command in the early days of an era which will frame its demands upon institutions such as Livingstone in a vocabulary which has but recently acquired new words, fresh invention of concepts, and confusion of definitions.

He merits the full measure of the support and confidence of his board of trustees, faculty, and students, and of this entire community.

Livingstone Faculty, Students Contribute $1,500 To UNCF

SALISBURY, N. C. — (ANP) — One of the highlights of a recent chapel program at Livingston college was the presentation of contributions for the United Negro College fund on behalf of the faculty and student body.

Mrs. Victoria P. Yates, chairman of the faculty committee for this fund presented to Acting President Brockett a check for $782, the amount given by the faculty and staff members. Henry A. Moses, president of the Pre-Alumni club, and representing the student body, made the presentation of a check for $672.39.

The United Negro College fund is composed of 33 member colleges, and is designed as an educational chest to make a single annual appeal to help meet the current operating cost of the member colleges.

Since its first appeal in 1944, the UNCF has raised nearly $20,000,000 for yearly operating purposes, and during this same period more than 40,000 young men and women have graduated from the member colleges.

Livingstone college, a member of the UNCF, has been greatly assisted by the fund for current expenses as well as for capital outlay.

Dr. Duncan New President Of Livingstone College

SALISBURY, N.C.—Dr. S. E. Duncan, a native of Salisbury and supervisor of Negro high schools in North Carolina, was elected president of Livingstone College last week. The 53-year-old state education offical will take over his new duties on July 1.

Dr. Duncan succeeds Dr. W. J. Trent, long-time president who retired last June bacause of poor health. J. H. Brockett has been acting president since Dr. Trent's retirement.

THE ELECTION of Dr. Duncan was a highlight of the annual Founder's Day program at the college. Another outstanding feature was the financial report which showed that contributions totaling $82,242 had been donated to the college from the Episcopal areas of the AME Zion Church.

Dr. Duncan was selected at the semi-annual meeting of the board of trustees. He is a graduate of the college and has had considerable experience in the field of education.

THE NEW president is the son of Mrs. S. E. Duncan of Salisbury and the late Mr. Duncan. He attended grammar school and high school in Salisbury, was graduated from Livingstone and received his M. A. and Ph.D. degrees from Cornell University. He served as principal at the Dunbar high school and as principal at Reidsville high school before going with the State Department of Education in 1946.

The second highlight of the Founder's Day activities was the financial reports coming from the Episcopal areas of the AME Zion Church along with the college faculty, seminary and college student body. A grand total of $82,242.28 was presented to the Acting President J. H. Brockett to be used for current expenses during the school year. Of this amount $2,055 was contributed by the College personnel, and a special alumni contribution.

DR. S. E. DUNCAN
Heads Livingstone

Succeeds Dr. W. J. Trent

Dr. Duncan Is Elected Livingstone's Prexy

SALISBURY, N. C.—Dr. Samuel E. Duncan, supervisor of Negro high schools for the state of North Carolina, was elected by the board of trustees as president of Livingstone College, succeeding Dr. W. J. Trent, who retired last spring after serving 32 years.

It was rumored on the campus that a bitter undercover fight had developed within the board of trustees over the election group.

One faction was led by Bishop W. J. Walls, senior Bishop of the AME Zion Church and chairman of the board of trustees who favored Prof. J. H. Brockett, the acting president, and another group favored Dr. Samuel E. Duncan, led by Bishop C. Eubank Tucker of the 10th Episcopal District.

It was revealed that Dr. Duncan was elected by a 2 to 1 vote over Prof. Brockett.

The Board of Bishops was also in session on the campus, attending to business that had not been completed at the regular meeting at Key West, Fla.

The following members of the board were in attendance:

Bishops W. J. Walls, Chicago; W. C. Brown, Brooklyn; Raymond L. Jones, Salisbury, N. C.; H. J. Medford, Washington, D. C.; H. B. Shaw, Wilmington, N. C.; W. A. Stewart, Washington, D. C.; C. Eubank Tucker, Louisville, Ky., and J. D. Cauthen, Norfolk, Va.

Head of Negro College Denies Charge By Group

SALISBURY, (AP) — The acting president of Livingstone College defended the Negro institution Thursday against the American Assn. of University Professors' charge that it repudiated a teacher's contract on religious grounds.

"We don't make a policy of discriminating against people because of their religious beliefs," said acting President J. B. Brockett. "We have had Catholics and Jews on the faculty, as well as those of other religious denominations."

Livingstone was one of nine colleges and universities criticized by the AAUP Wednesday night for alleged violations of academic freedom in dismissing faculty members.

In Livingstone's case, the AAUP criticism stemmed from the breaking of a contract with Prof. G. M. Mertens before he actually joined the staff. Mertens is a Unitarian and the school is supported by the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church.

"This was an individual action," said Brockett of the Mertens incident. "The contract was voided in a legal manner on a 60-day notice."

Brockett added, "The voiding of the contract between Livingstone College and Dr. Mertens was an action of the board of trustees. The board apparently felt that his religious beliefs were not in keeping with the overall beliefs of the school."

CHICAGO — "We will not take an atheist or a person of the Unitarian faith into Livingstone College as an instructor.

"Dr. Mertens is of the Unitarian faith. We don't believe in what he believes in and we have no apologies to make for our action in turning down his contract."

The speaker was Bishop William J. Walls of Chicago, chairman of the Livingstone trustee board.

At the same time, Bishop Walls made it clear there is "no religious discrimination at Livingstone."

"However," he added, "Livingstone is a church school designed to train leaders in the AME Zion Church. It could not employ any faculty members who do not believe in Jesus Christ."

BISHOP WALLS recalled that the college at one time employed a Jewish teacher of Hebrew, but that he was discharged when he told a class that the birth and resurrection of Jesus were myths."

The student body and faculty are interdenominational and three heads of departments at the college are not members of the AME Zion Church.

HIS COMMENTS came in the wake of charges by the American Association of University Professors that Livingstone College had religiously discriminated against Prof. G. M. Mertens in repudiating his contract.

Prof. Mertens, who previously taught at Blackburn College in Illinois, submitted a contract to join the Livingstone faculty in March of 1957.

In June of that year, the Livingstone trustees voided the contract, according to Bishop Walls, because of Prof. Merten's religious faith.

"We don't choose to call it exactly religious discrimination We have none of that. Prof. Merten's beliefs differ religiously from ours and the trustees felt that the students at Livingstone should not be exposed to them," Bishop Walls explained.

THE AAUP accused Livingstone of violating academic freedoms in turning down Prof. Merten's contract.

Dr. Robert K. Carr, general secretary of the association in Washington, stated;

"We feel that Livingstone College failed to make its policies in this matter in the beginning.

"Prof. Merten had corresponded with the president and dean of the school and received word that he had been engaged on the staff.

Afro-American

"SUBSEQUENTLY HE made it known that he was a Unitarian and Bishops Walls wrote him that the trustees refused his contract because of the religious factor. Sat 4-12-58

"We recognize," Dr. Carr said, "that church - sponsored schools have the right to impose rules, but these regulations must be made clear in the beginning.

4-12

"This was not the case at Livingstone College in reference to Prof. Merten, even though he had not actually joined the staff.

"We acknowledge that trustees have the legal authority to act in such matters, but it is invariably the custom for department heads of schools to recruit faculty members.

"IT IS VIRTUALLY unheard of for trustees to refuse the staff recommendations of deans and other officials. Prof. Merten was highly recommended when he applied to the school."

Dr. Carr said his agency makes investigations of violations of accepted academic standards in colleges and universities and submits reports on the findings.

He said violations of standards can lead to recommendations that schools be censured.

In denying accusations that Livingstone practiced religious discrimination in the selection Walls said:

said:

"We have had teachers of all nationalities and colors on our staff, but have a right to turn down anyone who falls short of our qualifications.

"Dr. Merten was to teach the principles of theology at Livingstone. We did not want our boys and girls to be exposed to the ideals of religion that Dr. Merten undoubtedly would reflect.

"We have no fears, we're not a part of the National Council of Churches and we're not running from anything."

Reached for comment at his home in Salisbury, N.C., acting Livingstone College President J. B. Brockett stated:

"This event happened in March, 1957, under an action by the board of trustees, prior to my taking office.

"Prof. Merten never taught at Livingstone, his contract being voided in June, 1957. He was scheduled to join the staff in September.

"We don't make a policy of discriminating against people because of their religious beliefs.

"We have had Catholics and Jews on our faculty as well as persons of other faiths.

"This," President Brockett said, "was an individual action. The contract was voided in a legal manner on a 60-day notice."

Livingstone was one of nine colleges and universities criticized by the AAUP.

GREENVILLE, Ala. — In observance of Founders' Day of Lomax - Hannon College here, Wednesday, communicants of the AME Zion Church reported $10,789 for education.

"To review the work of the founding fathers, evaluate and keep up the spirit of the founders" was the subject of Dr. J. W. Eichelberger's address to the large group gathered here in the auditorium building for the observance. During his discourse, he said, "no institution can take the place of a Christian College, which trains people for Christian discipleship."

In reviewing the history of Christian education and church related institutions, Dr. Eishelberger pointed up, through examples, that God always provided leadership for every emergency. As he elaborated on keeping the spirit of the Founding Fathers alive, he used a phrase of the theme song, "Sure I Must Fight," to illustrate his thought.

Dr. Eichelberger, general secretary of Christian Education for the Zion Connection, was selected to deliver the featured address in absence of Bishop W. C. Brown who was programmed but unable to attend. Two other programmed participants, Bishop W. J. Walls, senior bishop and Bishop H. B. Shaw, were also unable to be present.

Presiding and presenting the speaker was the Rt. Rev. W. A. Stewart, presiding prelate of the Eighth Episcopal District, comprising five conferences in Alabama, who commended the presiding elders, pastors and laymen for a cooperative job.

NEW BRANCH WILL OPEN WITHOUT SEGREGATION

NEW ORLEANS. — (UPI) — Two young Negroes registered at the New Orleans branch of Louisiana University Tuesday, the first of their race to be accepted as undergraduates in the LSU system.

The decision to admit the Negroes to the New Orleans branch marked compliance with a Federal Court order issued Monday which struck down segregation at the school even before it began its academic life.

The Negroes, a boy and a girl, appeared outwardly calm as were the hundreds of white students who roamed the large registration hall signing up for classes at the new "commuter college."

Most of the white students ignored the Negroes, 17-year-old Josephine Hill, who said she will major in elementary education, and Harold Fontenette, 18, a major in social science.

They were both neatly dressed, the boy in a conservative dark blue suit and the girl in a trim red and green checked dress.

School officials appeared friendly and helpful as the Negro freshmen went through the enrollment procedure.

The first Negroes appeared on the campus Tuesday morning, but were barred from the campus while officials at the main branch of the university met in secret session in Baton Rouge.

The LSU officials decided to obey U.S. District Judge Herbert Christenberry's order. A telephone call to Dean Hitt at the New Orleans college gave the Negroes a green light to register.

Dean Hitt said LSU attorneys in Baton Rouge instructed him to proceed to register all academically-qualified Negroes.

The school joins a small number of other Louisiana colleges that has Negro students in undergraduate classes. They are McNeese State College, Southeastern College and Southwestern Louisiana Institute.

Negro graduate students have been attending classes at several branches of LSU, including the law and medical schools.

BULLETIN

Registration of Negro students at LSUNO was begun on Tuesday afternoon on the campus, despite conflicting reports that the Negro applicants were not allowed on the campus. Dr. Homer L. Hitt told this newspaper that the students were allowed on the campus, though actual registration was not begun immediately because the school awaited word from the legal counsel. The injunction was not to go into effect until it was received at the school. Dr. Hitt said it arrived about 10:25 a.m. Legal counsel for the school conferred, then came the announcement that Negro applicants would be registered. A group of students told the Weekly they had begun registration and were being treated fairly. Unconfirmed reports set the number of Negro students that had registered at 2, about 2 p.m. Actual figures were not immediately available. Meanwhile, Attorney General Jack P. F. Gremillion announced that attorneys from his office and from the school are set to request an order from the U. S. Court of Appeals to stop enrollment at least temporarily.

neys, Judge Christenberry pointed out the needlessness or the lack of logic, then ruled it out.

Under the injunction as signed by Judge Christenberry, LSUNO can no longer deny Negro students their right of an education there because of their race.

Special Segregation Counsel William Shaw, during the hearing, asked that Judge Christenberry revert from open court proceedings to an informal conference of attorneys in the jurist's chambers with the judge present also, in order that a matter might be discussed "which we feel should not be taken up in open court." Shaw gave no indication of the nature of the matter to be discussed, saying only that it was "another matter."

After expressing surprise over such a request, Judge Christenberry declared that "the court does not intend to become a part of any star chamber proceedings." The jurist denied the request with the following words: "The court is amazed at the request. Do you mean that a matter so important to the public should be discussed in private and be kept from the public?"

Continuing, Judge Christenberry asserted that the only step the LSU Board of administrators could take that would satisfy the court, would be to admit Negro students.

Another of the defense attorneys asked that the effect of the injunction not be felt until such time as the LSU Board of administrators met. To this request, the jurist, in calm but often bored tones, stated that he read in the newspaper that members of the board were available to meet sooner. He asserted that had they thought it important to meet they would have met and that the request would entail an unnecessary delay if granted.

Defense attorneys also brought up the fact that some "problems" would be created by the admittance of the students "at this time." Seemingly at the end of his patience with the efforts to stall, Judge Christenberry said flatly, "let's not anticipate any problems." He went on to cite cases where integration had worked smoothly without any incidents. Negro students have been attending school in a university right here "...in this city" without incidents," he stated.

After reflecting for a brief moment, Judge Christenberry added that he had confidence in the citizens of "this civilized community" that they would accept the rulings of the court without any incidents developing.

Earlier, Attorney Alexander P. Tureaud, counsel for the plaintiffs, presented for filing into the records letters that were received from LSUNO by the plaintiffs that stated they were not being accepted because the LSU board did not admit Negroes. Tureaud pointed out that they were denied admission only because of their race.

Tureaud said further that a delay in the injunction would cause damage to the students and would cause at least "one year's delay' in the students studies.

Seated in the courtroom were about twleve Negroes beside the plaintiffs as opposed to three or four whites. Satisfaction could be seen in the faces of the Negro spectators as the judge time and time again ruled on requests of the defense attorneys.

The plaintiffs that sought admittance were: Ernestine Lyons, Philip Mitchell, Louise Williams, Jacqueline Stansberry, Josephine Eli, Jamesetta Henley, Daniel Lewis, Walter Lee Peck, Wilson Fleming and Harold Fontenette.

After the hearing was completed, the group along with Attorney Tureaud and Attorneys Antoine Trudeau and Ernest Morial were besiged by TV newsreel cameramen and interviewers.

Some capsule comment by the students on the granting of the injunction:

FLEMING: "I feel just fine about the whole situation."

PECK: "I feel simply wonderful about it."

MISS WILLIAMS: "I would not have been able to attend college if I had not been able to attend LSUNO. The decision was just fine.'

MISS STANSBERRY: "I would have been disappointed if the injunction was not enforced. I feel fine too."

MISS ELI: "I won't say I feel fine. I'll say I feel wonderful.'

MISS LYONS: "I am so excited. I think it is great. I certainly will make the best of my opportunity."

FONTENETTA: "I am glad and happy. It will be a great aid financially."

MITCHELL: "I think it is the most wonderful thing that has ever happened to me. I'll make the best of everything offered."

Faulty Wiring Blamed In Negro School Fire

WEST POINT, Miss. (Special)—Authorities tod[illegible] tentatively blamed an electri[illegible] line as the cause of a fire which destroyed a dormitory at Mary Holmes Junior College for Negroes yesterday but a deputy state fire marshal was enroute there to investigate the blaze.

Sheriff L. W. Walker said early investigation indicated the blaze started from a short circuit in an electrical wire in the ceiling of the dormitory.

A deputy fire marshal was expected today to investigate further.

STUDENT IS BURNED

The two-story dormitory burned down early Sunday. Dawson Horn, administrator of the college, said a student sleeping in the building discovered the blaze at 2 a. m. and notified two other persons who were asleep in the building. One of the three suffered minor burns as he escaped.

Horn estimated damage at $50,000.

The junior college, operated by the Presbyterian Church of the U. S. A., was the scene of an integrated "work camp" last summer.

Residents of the area said feeling ran high when the school was integrated last summer. White students from Kansas cut short their tour on the campus as a result of a complaint from Clay county residents.

Fire Destroys Men's Dormitory At Mary Holmes Junior College

West Point, Miss., June 2—A men's dormitory at Mary Holmes Junior College, a Negro school which was the scene of a heated racial controversy here last year, burned to the ground Sunday.

Officials could not immediately determine the cause of the fire. The blaze was discovered by one of three students sleeping in the two story wooden structure. He turned in the alarm and then awoke the two other occupants. One of the students, Albert Smith, was burned on the right arm.

Professor Dawson Horn, Negro administrator of the junior college which is owned by the United Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., said final estimate of the damage had not been compiled but that it would be at least $75,000.

A controversy between white citizens of West Point and the school officials flared last year when a group of University of Kansas students, boys and girls, visited the campus and spent a week under integrated conditions.

Although feeling ran high in the Clay County Citizens Council, the situation cooled when the Kansas students cut their vacation short and returned home.

Professor Horn posed for newspaper photographers with white girl students who were clad in shorts and scrubbing the floor of the administration building.

In the fire Sunday, firemen said they were unable to save the building because of the insufficient water supply. The school is located about one mile west of the West Point city limits on State Highway 10.

A BUSY SCHEDULE — Dr. Harold D. West, left, president of Meharry Medical College and professor of biochemistry, and Richard A. Despite an extremely busy schedule as president of the school, he directs research on the use of radioactive silver in therapy of experimental cancer and studies of the fate of substances related to chemicals which produces cancer.

Meharry Has Two White Students

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Meharry Medical College, which graduated more than half the Negro physicians and dentists now practicing in the United States, has two white regular students — the first in its 82-year history.

They were enrolled without publicity a year ago and are back on the campus for their second terms. This was reported exclusively by Southern School News.

But Meharry's president, Dr. Harold Dadford West, emphasized in an interview with Southern School News that the college will maintain its primary objective of creating doctors, dentists, nurses, related technicians for Negro population.

"That is the purpose Meharry was established to serve," he declared, "and I think it will continue on that basis for a long time to come."

COLLEGE NEUTRAL

Dr. West, first Negro president of the college, asserted that the institution is concerned neither with "integration for the sake of integration" nor with "segregation for the sake of segregation."

The energetic, soft-spoken biochemist, a Ph.D. from the University of Illinois, who has been with Meharry 32 years and its president since 1952, said the school's policy as to enrollment has "changed slightly recently, but only slightly."

"We had used the word Negro in referring to our students in publications but decided to eliminate reference to it after the court decision," he explained, referring to the U. S. Supreme Court's school desegregation action of 1954.

However, school literature still emphasizes Meharry's concern with serving the Negro population.

Meharry-trained physicians, dentists and nurses practice in three-fourths of the states, and in Europe, Asia, Africa, South America, Central America and the West Indies.

Negro Medical College Admits 2 Whites

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP)—Meharry College, widely known as one of the nation's outstanding Negro medical schools, has come up with an integration wrinkle in reverse. It has admitted two white students.

Dr. Harold D. West, Meharry president, said the college still is oriented toward serving the nation's Negro population. But he said Meharry never has had a rule against admitting white students.

Southern School News, a publication of the Southern Education Reporting Service, identified the two white students as Ralph S. Lachman of Philadelphia, a medical student, and Albert L. Goreman of Miami, Fla., a dental student.

Dr. West said the 82-year-old Meharry College is unconcerned with "integration for the sake of integration' or with "segregation for the sake of segregation."

Meharry officials said about 40 per cent of the nation's Negro medical students are enrolled at the Nashville school, established a few years after the Civil War to help educate the newly-freed Negroes.

The faculty members are all Negro but most of the visiting lecturers are white. Many of its part-time lecturers and consultants are members of the Vanderbilt University faculty here.

MSU To Learn Integration Fate

Smith Going To Nashville For Decision Today On His Request For Delay

Memphis State University will learn today whether integration will begin next month or be put off for a year.

J. Millard Smith, president, will go to Nashville this morning for a decision by the State Board of Education on his request for the delay.

The board promised an early decision when Mr. Smith appeared before it Aug. 8, with a prediction of "considerable trouble and even violence" if Negroes are admitted.

The university president said yesterday he would have no comment until after the board has acted.

8 Negroes Passed Exams

Eight Negroes have passed entrance examinations required by the university and are eligible to enter this fall under a desegregation plan adopted by the board last fall. Two others who took the examination failed.

Mr. Smith told the board he is convinced that another year is needed because the proposal is "not acceptable to a large majority of the people."

Integrational Drive Planned In Memphis

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Attorneys for eight Negro students plan to ask a federal court in Memphis, Tenn., Monday that Memphis State University be ordered to admit them, all of whom have passed entrance examinations.

FRONT ROYAL, Va. — A group of 17 Negro teen-agers, armed with a court order, were turned back Saturday when they sought to enroll at Warren County High School already ordered shut down by Gov. Almond.

WASHINGTON — Congressional repercussions are expected in January in the Supreme Court's ruling Friday that integration should proceed immediately at Little Rock's Central High School.

VAN BUREN, Ark. — The nation's far-flung racial struggle leaves Negro children in this west Arkansas town caught in a dilemma—afraid to attend the city's legally integrated schools and unable to attend nearby segregated ones.

The answer to their problem lies in what could be a long, tedious court case.

Meantime the children—about 16 of them—gather in small groups to study in preparation for the day when they can return to school, wherever it may be.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — A crowd estimated at 200 by police picketed Birmingham City Hall Saturday in protest against fines of $200 each assessed against three white men in connection with a demonstration at Phillips High School.

The three men were fined Friday for failure to obey a lawful command and for loitering. The charge grew out of a demonstration Sept. 3 at the school following rumors Negroes would attempt to enroll there. No such attempt was made.

NEGROES LIKELY TO REGISTER AT MEMPHIS STATE

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (UPI) — Negroes have passed Memphis State University's entrance examinations, "and it is my guess they will be admitted this fall," says President J. M. Smith.

"I've been against it (integration) and always will be," Smith said. "I'm being forced by the courts to admit some (Negroes)."

"I've been backed up and faced the jailhouse. I've decided I'm not going to run, but stay and face it and do the best I can."

Smith spoke to legislative candidates here yesterday. He urged them to endorse Memphis State's four-year, $4.5 million dollar expansion plan.

Solons Act To Improve State's Negro Colleges

By TIM PARKER
Associated Press Writer

The Mississippi Legislature moved today to restore the standings of two of the state's three state-supported Negro colleges.

Quick action was expected on a bill to appropriate 1½ million dollars for new buildings and equipment for the schools, two of which have been put on probation by the Southern Assn. of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

The measure was introduced yesterday by House Speaker Walter Sillers of Bolivar County.

Major beneficiary would be Alcorn A and M College near Port Gibson, which would get $750,000 to finance a science-library building, a mechanical arts building and a gymnasium. Jackson State would get $575,000 for a classroom building, equipment and dormitory site. Mississippi Vocational at Itta Bena would get $175,000 for an infirmary and equipment.

BOTH ON PROBATION

Alcorn A&M and Jackson State are on probation but Dr. E. R. Hobe, executive secretary of the State College Board, said work planned under the 1½ million-dollar appropriation would restore their standing.

He said Mississippi Vocational never has been accredited but that the $175,000 appropriation, when carried out, should enable it to gain that standing.

But the Senate and House reconvened at 2 p. m. today with light calenders. A series of committee meetings this week should process some of the bills now mired.

Virdrine Jr., of Gulfport, Roland Cranford of Hattiesburg, Ted Wilbering more than 140, for floor consideration.

House action yesterday on two Ways and Means Committee measures was prevented when Rep. Hilton Watts of Washington County committee chairman, did not show up. Friends said he was in Greenville serving as attorney for the county board of supervisors.

Rep. Thompson McClellan of Clay County called the House Constitution Committee into brief session to approve a bill to implement a 1956-ratified constitutional amendment to close a car tax loophole.

ONE TRIP

The bill would authorize taxing authorities to collect ad valorem taxes on cars at the same time taxpayers buy car license plates.

Into the House hopper went a well-advertised bill by Rep. Clarence Pierce of Carroll County to re-apportion House seats by adding one member each from Forrest, Harrison, Jones and Jackson counties.

It also would make the present Hinds - Yazoo county floated a Hinds County representative and the Harrison - Jackson floater a Harrison County legislator.

Reps. Upton Sisson and Dan Guice of Harrison County joined 16 other legislators in co-sponsoring Pierce's bill but several south Mississippi advocates of "real apportionment" were expected to oppose it.

Sillers, often the decisive man in such questions, also may not be pleased with Pierce's measure. Sillers has said he hopes re-apportionment can be done without enlarging membership of either house. Pierce's bill would boost the House from 140 to 144 members.

$1,500,000 Would Be Spent For New Buildings

From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 13.—Two of Mississippi's most ardent segregationists Monday proposed that the Legislature appropriate $1,500,000 for new buildings at the state's three major colleges for Negroes. They are House Speaker Walter Sillers of Bolivar County and Representative Russell Fox of Claiborne County.

The $1,500,000 would be spent as follows—

For a science-library building, a mechanical arts building and gymnasium at Alcorn College for Negroes, $750,000, for a classroom building, a site for a dormitory and equipment of buildings at Jackson State College for Negroes, $575,000, and for an infirmary and equipment for buildings at Mississippi Vocational College for Negroes, $175,000.

At the November special legislative session, Speaker Sillers gained passage of an approval of an allocation of $150,000 for a student union building at the vocational college at Itta Bena.

MISSISSIPPI SOUTHERN COLLEGE
DISCRIMINATION

Negro Will Sue For Admission

Kennard Wants To Enter Mississippi Southern

APPLICATION IS DENIED

By The United Press International

HATTIESBURG, Miss., Dec. 13.—Negro Clyde Kennard, a former University of Chicago student who wants to attend all-white Mississippi Southern College, said Saturday he intends to file a court suit if it takes that to be admitted.

Kennard, 30, who lives on a farm near here with his mother, was asked if he would go into Federal Court if his second application for enrollment is rejected. "I hope it won't be necessary," Kennard said. "The people at the college have been quite considerate. I believe it would be best for the college and the community if I would not have to resort to court action. But it may be necessary to do that."

Dr. W. D. McCain, college president, announced this week that Kennard had told the college he would submit another application for enrollment as an undergraduate for the winter quarter beginning Jan. 6. His first application, submitted almost three years ago, was incomplete, McCain said.

Dr. McCain did not elaborate but Kennard said his application did not include the names of five persons who attended Southern who would vouch for his moral character. This is a requirement made by the State College Board for all institutions under its jurisdiction. It has never been tested in the courts.

He said the new application he intends to submit in a few days also will not contain the names of five former Southern students. "Some of the students who have been admitted to Southern have not met that requirement," Kennard said.

Kennard said he planned to confer with Dr. McCain again Monday and would decide after that when to submit the new application.

He said he wanted to attend Southern because he needs to stay at home to look after his mother and there is no Negro college in the area. He plans to major in political science and eventually earn a Ph.D. degree at the University of Chicago.

State Preparing Defense Against Negro Student

HATTIESBURG, Miss. (UPI)—State and school officials were preparing today for another enrollment attempt by a Negro chicken farmer at all-white Mississippi Southern College.

Dr. W. D. McCain, school president, confirmed Wednesday that Clyde Kennard, about, 30, had informed the school he would try to enroll as an undergraduate next month. Registration for the winter quarter starts Jan. 3.

Kennard, who operates a small chicken farm near here, first applied for admission three years ago but officials said his application was not complete and he made no effort to submit a new one. He has done college work out of the state but still wants to earn a bachelor's degree at Southern.

"There are several things which can be done in connection with the application if it is filed," McCain said. He did not enumerate them.

In Jackson officials indicated the application would be submitted to the State College Board for study. The board has a regulation requiring persons applying for registration to colleges under its jurisdiction to submit the names of five alumni who will recommend them for admission.

The State Sovereignty Commission, the official agency for maintaining segregation, several days ago sent a secret investigator to Hattiesburg in connection with Kennard's attempt.

Mississippi has maintained segregation from kindergarten through the college graduate level and no court suits have been filed by Negroes seeking entrance to white schools. However, at least two other attempts have been made by Negroes to get in white colleges.

Medgar Evers, now state field secretary for the NAACP, was rejected as a University of Mississippi student several years ago on non-racial grounds. The Rev. Clennon King, a former history professor, tried to enroll at the university last June but was rejected by force.

Negro Renewing Try For College

Will Make Second Attempt At Mississippi Southern

WOULD BE STATE'S FIRST

By United Press International

HATTIESBURG, Miss., Dec. 10.—Mississippi Southern College announced Wednesday that a Hattiesburg Negro has renewed his efforts to enroll in the all-white college as the first break in the state's totally-segregated school system.

Dr. W. D. McCain, school president, said Clyde Kennard, about 30, who lives on a farm near here, informed the school he would make a second attempt to enroll as an undergraduate next month. Registration for the second quarter is Jan. 3-5.

Applied Three Years Ago

Kennard first applied for admission three years ago but officials at the time said his application was not complete and Kennard made no effort to submit a new one. He has done college work out of the state but still wants to earn a bachelor's degree here, Dr. McCain said.

"There are several things which can be done in connection with the application if it is filed," Dr. McCain said.

Officials indicated it would be submitted to the State College Board in Jackson which requires the recommendations of five alumni for persons entering colleges under the board's jurisdiction.

The State Sovereignty Commission, the state's official agency for maintaining segregation, several days ago sent a secret investigator to Hattiesburg in connection with Kennard's attempt to enter the college. He was reported seeking information on the matter.

No Suits Filed

Mississippi has maintained school segregation from kindergarten through the graduate level of college and no court suits have been filed by Negroes for entrance to white schools. At least two attempts have been made by Negroes to enroll in the University of Mississippi, however.

Medgar Evans, state field secretary for the NAACP, was rejected on non-racial grounds several years ago. Rev. Clennon King, a former history professor, also tried to enroll in the university last June but he was carried from the campus by the State Highway Patrol and admitted to the State Mental Hospital for observation.

The NAACP in Jackson said it had no knowledge of Kennard's intention to enroll at Southern next month.

"Christening Game" between the Maroon Tigers and Fisk University Bulldogs.

City-wide interest has been centered on Morehouse since early last year when construction workers got busy on the campus and started unloading steel, concrete, bricks, other building materials and equipment. Now Atlantans want to get a glimpse of the interior of the new, multi-purpose building which is designed for extraordinary flexibility and comfort.

"BIG GAME" ADDS EXTRA INCENTIVE

The "big game" between Morehouse and Fisk, which will have a direct bearing on the SIAC visitation championship, provides and added incentive for a history-making crowd.

There will be no fanfare or ceremony, however, as "Open House" has been set for Sunday, January 19, and the spacious new building will be dedicated on Founder's Day February 18, 1958.

The new sports and recreation center has emerged after years of extensive research and planning, and according to Dr. Frank L. Forbes, director of Athletic and basketball coach, the major emphasis was placed on the instructional and service units.

ATLANTA'S LARGEST AND MOST EXPENSIVE

The $835,000 for financing the construction and equipping of the largest and most costly building ever erected on the campuses of the Negro colleges in Atlanta came fro mlarge gifts to the college and funds raised by loyal Morehouse alumni throughout the country.

The imposing brick structure was designed by Edward O. Miller, prominent Atlanta architect and built by Barge-Thompson, Inc., a well-known local contracting firm.

Plans for the new building were disclosed in January, 1955, when Morehouse alumni launched "Operation Gym-Swim," a fund-raising campaign to raise the additional money needed for the swimming pool. The actual construction started two years later, after the ground-breaking ceremonies on February 18, 1957, during the 90 anniversary celebration of Morehouse College.

ESSENTIAL FEATURES

In a nutshell, the essential features of the new Health and Physical Education Building include the combination gymnasium-auditorium, with a seating capacity of 2,300 for basketball games and approximately 3,500 for concerts and commencement; the large swimming pool (75 ft. x 42 ft.). with an automatic filter system and seats for spectators; and big locker and dressing rooms, with showers, rest rooms, classrooms and offices.

Morehouse Debaters Win Second Place In National Tournament

Daily World, Atlanta Ga.
Tribune 3-13-58

The affirmative and negative debating teams of Morehouse College attended the Brooklyn College Invitational Debate Tournament that was held in Brooklyn, March 7 and 8, and they tied for second place with Bowdoin College, Holy Cross College, the University of Pennsylvania, and Wooster College. First-place honors were shared by Dartmouth College and St. Peter's College.

This was the most significant victory of the Morehouse debaters so far, for it involved competition in which they won higher rating than such schools as Amherst, Columbia, Harvard, Princeton, New York University, the University of North Carolina, Fordham, and William and Lee. Sixty-three institutions participated in the tournament. Upholding the affirmative side of the question on compulsory unionism were Morehouse students Robert Williams, a junior from Peoria, Ill., and Samuel E. Allen, a senior from Richmond, Virginia. Morehouse students Preston Yancey, a junior from Tifton, Geeorgia, and Frederick Williams, a junior from Chattanooga, Tennessee, debate the nagative side. The affirmative team won all five of its rounds of debate; the negative team won three out of five.

The coach of debate at Morehouse is Professor A. Russell Brooks, associate professor of English. Professor Brooks is greatly encouraged by the showing of his squad, which is now flexing its muscles for the West Point Regional Tournament at Wake Forest College next week, which may lead to participation in another national tournament at West Point Military Academy in April.

A $69,400 grant to sponsor a summer institute for high school teachers of science has been awarded to Morgan State College by the National Science Foundation.

The award is the third made to the college within the past three years and brings the total granted to $199,100 for the sponsoring of teacher-training institutes.

Teacher - training institutes are being sponsored on a nation-wide plan as part of the Foundation's attempt to provide opportunities for teachers of science "to cooperate in improving the quality of their teaching and to learn at first hand of recent research progress in their respective fields," Dr. Alan T. Waterman, National Science Foundation Director, explains.

The Morgan institute will be held June 22 to August 14, 1959 and will be directed by Dr. Thomas P. Fraser, professor and head of the department of science education at the college.

Dr. Fraser directed the other two Morgan institutes — the initial one held in 1957 on a $66,000 award and the 1958 program sponsored on a $63,700 award.

This summer fifty stipends will be available to teachers. The stipends will cover costs of tuition and other fees at the rate of $75 per week per participant.

Junior and senior high school teachers of science are eligible for the institute which will offer courses in astronomy, biology, chemistry, geology, physics and mathematics and an integrated seminar on improvement of science instruction in the secondary schools.

$1,700 In Cash Taken As Thieves Loot Morris Brown

Thieves looted the business offices of Morris Brown College of more than a thousand dollars in cash and a huge check belonging to the United Negro College Fund, police reported.

Carolyn T. Holmes and Ida Barnes quoted the school's business manager G. W. Moore, of Simpson Terrace, N. W., as saying the following was taken: A [illegible] and cash amounting to $1,700.

Officers said there were seven persons in the vicinity of the [illegible] when the thieves apparently entered through a window and went straight to the room where the money was in a safe.

Afro book critic to talk at Morris Brown soon

ATLANTA, Ga. — J. Saunders Redding, world known author will appear in the Morris Brown College chapel, Wednesday, April 16 at 8 p.m.

Mr. Redding, AFRO book reviewer, gained prominence after winning the 1944 North Carolina Mayflower Society Award with his non-fictional study of the South, "No Day of Triumph." Earlier, he had written "To Make a Poet Black."

His "Stranger and Alone," which Harcourt, Brace published in February, 1950, received highly favorable receptions. The novel was published in pocketbook size and translated into German for the "Books Across the Sea" program.

HIS "THEY CAME IN CHAINS," part of Lippincott's "People of America Series," was published in July, 1952. It tells the tale of generations of slavery, illiteracy, disfranchisement, and discrimination during which a race has been moving toward the gradually evolving status of "American Citizen, First Class." It examines the roots of the conflict that shaped the Civil War.

"An American in India," published in 1954, is a result of an invitation by the State Department to fill a foreign assignment in India. The author during the assignment made contact with Indians and explained the American way of life.

It became necessary for him to defend our pattern of life as well as the operation of democratic principles in America. The author states, "until I came to India, I had no idea that there was in me so great an urge to defend America . . . Communism meant little more than interesting reading in the newspaper."

Congratulations To Paine College

Over at Augusta, a neighborly city and an educational center in her own right, Paine College, founded by the Methodist and CME Churches—will stage the week of January 24 her 75th Anniversary.

Early in her history, Paine shone high in the educational elements as a prophesy and a challenge in the intellectual world.

During her history she has adhered to high standards and among her graduates will be found the proof of this educational venture.

In the first place, Paine filled a long felt need on that end of the state where both Georgia and the Carolinas could serve as feeders to a program of liberal education. This proximity enabled many young men and women to prepare for professional training of high order.

Secondly, Paine is the expression of friendly whites and rugged initiative of pioneers of our group in the early stage of Negro education, who not only was instrumental in the placing of Paine well in its orbit, but helped on another hand grave spirits like Bishop Holsey and his associates in the founding of a branch of the Methodist Church.

Paine especially personifies in many of its aspects, another champion of human justice and a fine spirit in public relations In his time, Bishop Atticus Green Haygood, whose volume, "Our Brothers In Black" has not only been an inspiration to thousands, but has kindled the fires of faith and given fine relation material to writers all over the world.

Paine is hereby saluted for her enviable place. May she go on and upward in the grand glory of the great emphasis of character with which she is divinely imbued.

Thousands Attend Paine College's 75th Anniversar

By E. A. CHAPMAN

AUGUSTA, Ga.—The 75th anniversary of Paine college drew several thousand visitors here for four days last week when leaders of the Methodist church and the Christian Methodist Episcopal church from all sections of America were here for the activities of the historic institution.

Paine college has the distinction of being the only college for Negro education which was established by Southerners for the education of Negroes. It is operated by a bi-racial committee which has continued without a break in its faculty and trustees. Paine college was established in 1883 in response to an appeal made to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal, South, (as it was then called) by Bishop Lucius H. Holsey, one of the most eloquent men of the Negro ra[illegible]

No Racial Rest[illegible]ons

There are no "racial restrictions" upon the enrollment, though because of its location the student body has remained predominantly Negro.

The Paine college faculty—made up of Southern white and Negro people—has the unique distinction of being the only one in deep Southern States where white and Negro faculty members work harmoniously for the betterment of the Negro race. Paine college is the sole Southern institution which has always had a Southern white man as the president. In the beginning, the faculty was composed of white people only; however, Dr. John W. Gilbert, because of his scholastic standing, was selected in 1888 as the first Negro teacher. Since then, Negroes have been added to the faculty and today Paine college ranks as one of the leading educational plants in the Southland.

Has Belgian Congo Students

Paine college boasts of having a screened student body. The students come predominantly from every State east of the Mississippi river; however, some come from foreign countries "as far away as the Belgian Congo." Five hundred students at present seek the advantage of a Christian education on the higher levels as are offered at Paine college. Paine college boasts of being "one of Methodism's oldest colleges for Negroes."

The school boasts of being a co-educational accredited "Class A" institution, being one of the few Southern institutions that is on the accredited list of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. It has membership in the Association of American colleges; the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools; the Association of Church-Related Colleges of America; the American Council on Education, and the United Negro College Fund, Inc.

General Action in 1882

The first action of the Methodist Episcopal church, South (as it was then called) was in 1878 when the General Conference of the M. E. church, South took official action designed to bring about the establishment of a school for Negroes. The Southern Methodists, by official action of the Bench of Bishops, said: "The guiding hand and transforming spirit of the church must be felt in the work of education. From the date of organization to the present hour, the Methodist Episcopal church, South, has been thoroughly alive to the moral and religious welfare of the African race. It is not claiming too much when we affirm that for whatever is praiseworthy in their conduct during the trying ordeal through which we have just passed, for whatever is gratifying in their present condition, and for whatever is hopeful in the prospect of their future, the colored people of the Southern States are more indebted to the Methodist Episcopal church, South, than to any other agency. The changes of the past have wrought no change in the heart of the church; it is still ready to work for the salvation of this people to the full measure of its ability and opportunity."

This message was followed by appropriate action designed to aid the Colored Methodist Episcopal church (now the Christian Methodist Episcopal church) to establish an "educational institutions for the moral and religious training" of Negro people. "We bespeak the cordial sympathy and practical aid of our people," the message of the Bishops of the M. E. church, South, said in 1882. Paine college (Paine Institute as it was first called) came into being the following year.

Bishop L. H. Holsey Speaks

Bishop Lucius H. Holsey, one of the founding fathers of the CME church, made a passionate appeal on behalf of the Christian Methodist Episcopal church before the leaders of the Southern Methodist Episcopal church. Bishop Holsey suggested that a charter be secured for Paine college, to be located in Augusta, Georgia, which was the center of the great Negro population of the Carolinas, Georgia, Florida and Alabama. Accordingly, this was done, and Bishop George F. Pierce suggested that the new school to be established be named "Paine Institute," in honor of Bishop Robert Paine, who, in his early life, offered to go as a missionary to Africa.

The committee setup to organize Paine college was equally composed of three members of the two churches: Bishop L. H. Holsey and two others to represent the CME church, and William P. Patillo, Atlanta; Charles C. Goodrich, Augusta, and Warren A. Candler, Sparta (who later was elected a Bishop of the M. E. church, South), of the Methodist church, South, were the six persons named to setup the organization of Paine college. The committee named to organize Paine college were influenced by Bishop Holsey to setup the new institution at Augusta, Ga.

A charter was issued to the Trustees by name and without reference to race.

The trustees of Paine college have for 75 years been drawn from both races. At present there are 16 white members and eight Negroes. (The reverse percentage is true of the faculty which is two-thirds Negro and one-third white, though there is no requirement to that effect. The 1957-58 faculty also lists a Chinese professor). The division of the election to the Board of Trustees is denominational and only incidentally racial.

Negro Methodists Contribute To Philander Smith

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., March 26.—A gift of $60,000 from the Negro Annual Conferences of the Methodist Church to the development program at Philander Smith College was announced here Wednesday.

This announcement follows one concerning a $77,000 gift from the general board of the Methodist Church and the White Annual Conferences.

"With our $300,000 new building reserve and the $800,000 loan approved by the Housing and Home Finance Agency of the Federal Government, we already had $1,100,000. These two contributions bring the program total to $1,237,000.

"The estimated cost of our new dormitory facilities and the new auditorium, fine arts and library building is approximately $1,500,000. Now only 12 days after our announcement of the building program—we are within $263,000 of that figure."

City Will Probe Faculty Bias Row

A sub-committee of six members has been appointed to look into "anonymous" charges of discrimination in faculty appointments at Queens College Gustave G. Rosenberg, chairman of the Board of Higher Education, announced today.

The committee is headed by Porter R. Chandler, with Simon H. Rifkind as vice-chairmen. Other members are John J. Morris, Henry E. Schultz, Mrs. Ella S. Streator and Charles H. Tuttle.

Mr. Rosenberg pointed out that no faculty member of Queens College has brought the charges of discrimination before the board.

"Despite the anonymity of the source of the charges, we will investigate fully," he said. "The board has not tolerated and will not tolerate discrimination."

The question of alleged discrimination in faculty appointments at Queens College was raised this summer by the Tablet, Brooklyn Catholic weekly. It charged that bias was responsible for the dropping from the Queens faculty of Dr. Dale G. Fallon, an instructor in political science, shortly before he was scheduled to receive permanent tenure.

In a suit brought by Dr. Fallon for reinstatement, the court criticized the college for its handling of the case but denied Dr. Fallon's petition. Dr. Fallon did not charge religious discrimination.

Nevertheless, since the question arose, Mayor Wagner asked the State Commission Against Discrimination to investigate the allegation.

CHRISTIAN A. HERTER, MAYOR WILLIAM ENLOE, DR. WILLIAM R. STRASSNER.

Herter Tells Shaw Grads

Need For Understanding Urgent

A plea for education for international understanding was voiced here Monday by Under Secretary of State Christian A. Herter in an address at the Shaw University graduation exercises.

The recent hostile demonstrations in South America underscore the urgent need for improvement in international relations, Herter said.

"The troubled world in which we live is a fact and we need to learn to live in and with it," he added.

Herter was introduced by Dr. William R. Strassner, president of Shaw, who presided at the exercises which were held in Memorial Auditorium. Following the address, Herter was presented an honorary doctor of laws degree.

Others receiving honorary degrees were Asa Timothy Spaulding of Durham, vice-president and controller of the N. C. Mutual Life Insurance Company, a Doctor of Laws degree, and the Rev. In his address, Herter told the Shaw graduates that, "You must be prepared to live as participating and contributing members of the international community that is slowly and painfully emerging.

". . . Education for international understanding is of paramount importance today," he stressed.

Reason For Urgency

One reason for urgency in this matter, he explained, is that lack of understanding between governments and peoples may lead to national policies that endanger other nations.

"Today," he warned, "the perfection of modern instruments of destruction makes limited military action very difficult."

Another reason for urgency, he continued, is the change in the membership and character of the family of nations caused by the emergence of new nations since the end of World War II. Extensive education is necessary in order to become familiar with the newly emerged nations.

One Prexy, Nine Profs Ousted

Heads Roll At 4 Colleges

(Courier Press Service)

Heads rolled in four Negro institutions of higher learning last week, and after all the chopping had taken place 10 faculty members and one college president were numbered among the nation's unmployed.

Down in Columbia, S. C., a total of six people received official dismissal notices where Gov. George Bell Timmerman precipitated a furors by levelling "pro-Communist" charges at Allen U. and Benedict staff members.

In North Little Rock, Ark., the Rev. T. D. Alexander, president of Shorter College since 1950 and three staff members resigned "by request."

AND IN LITTLE ROCK proper, Dr. Lee Lorch, stormy petrel of the ranks of the scholars, announced that he was leaving Philander Smith College to accept a job as visiting lecturer at Wesleyan U., Middletown, Conn.

In Dr. Lorch's case a member of the Philander board announced that he had not been asked to leave by the school.

However, at Shorter College, Rev. Alexander said that "controversial issues" and "politics" were behind his ouster. Kicked out along with him were Dean A. J. White, who had been in charge of student guidance; Mrs. Vera W. Muldrew, registrar; and the Rev. C. M. May, instructor in philosophy. Bishop O. L. Sherman said the ouster was part of an "economy move."

MEANWHILE, MRS. GRACE LORCH, wife of the ex-Philander Smith prof, faced a second grilling by the Eastland-Jenner Senate Internal Security Sub-committee. Sen. James Eastland, Miss. Democrat, heads the group which intends to question Mrs. Lorch about "communism." The quiz will coincide with the beginning of the Arkansas election drive in which Governor Faubus is seeking an unprecedented third term.

Ousted at Allen were John G. Rideout and Edwin Hoffman, both white, and Forest O. Wiggins. The Benedict dismissals affected the jobs of three other white profs.

Professors in demand

By JOHN H. McCRAY

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Six college professors, three each at Allen University and Benedict College, respectively, all targets of Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr., are now being eagerly sought by "almost a score" of other colleges.

Confirmation of reports that the sextet was being sought by other colleges, some of them state-operated and all of them in the Deep South or border states, came in "off the record" statements from the offices of Dr. Frank R. Veal at Allen, and Dr. J. A. Bacoats of Benedict College.

THE BENEDICT source said: "we've on hand a large number of requests from several colleges for the services of these people. The only stipulation is that none of them be listed by the U.S. Attorney General as a Communist or security risk."

At Allen, an administrative source cited six colleges from whom requests have come recently recommending that the three professors involved in the Timmerman move be referred to them for employment should Allen release them.

"As it is, I am two persons short in Ph.D. requirements," Dr. Veal said, pointing up the distress his college faces should it have to replace its three professors Timmerman wants fired, each of whom holds a Ph.D. degree.

TWO OF THE Benedict trio also have earned doctorates. The two colleges operate an exchange professorship, whereby students at both benefit from faculties of the two colleges.

Figuring the situation, it appeared that for five of the professors Timmerman demands dismissed, there are already three other colleges waiting for them with professors' chairs and higher salaries than they have been able to receive at either Allen or Benedict.

An administrative officer at one of the colleges told the AFRO that both institutions had been working on a program of enlarging upon the number of instructors on their respective faculties with doctorates as a means of meeting requirements of rating agencies.

"IT IS VERY difficult to find persons with Ph.D. degrees willing to work at the small salaries small colleges such as ours are able to pay. It's a great big headache," he said.

"The eagerness with which both of us are being contacted now by other colleges for the services of these professors, I think, proves the point and emphasizes the seriousness of the situation confronting both Allen and Benedict."

There was no indication from either college, however, that any of the professors would be dismissed, or resign, before the end of the current college year.

Trades Division Dropped By Saint Paul's College

Journal & Guide, Norfolk Va
Sat 5-3-58
P 2

LAWRENCEVILLE, Va. — Saint Paul's College here has decided to discontinue its program of industrial (trades) education.

An effort will be made to insure that students presently enrolled in the division, and not graduating next spring, will be permitted to complete their studies but no new applicants will be accepted for the courses.

Announcement of the decision was made by Dr. Earl H. McClenney, college president, following the February 27th meeting of the board of trustees, which directed that the trades division be terminated by the end of the 1959-60 academic year.

The action has been under consideration by the administration and trustees for some time.

IN A STATEMENT clarifying the decision, Dr. McClenney said:

"As a private, church-related college, it was felt that Saint Paul's must be unique to justify its existence. With the great technological advancements being achieved and the resulting and necessary emphasis on strengthening the training of teachers and developing departments of science and related subjects, we recognized a need to devote more attention to a broad liberal arts program and emphasize a program for the training of potential leaders."

Previously offering courses leading only to the B.S. degree, Saint Paul's this term inaugurated courses leading as well to the A. B. degree, with opportunities to specialize in preprofessional fields. All two-year, certificate courses had been discontinued earlier.

DR. McCLENNEY said further: "As a matter of fact, the industrial education program was not entirely representative of the objectives of the institution. It was determined that to continue the trades offerings was under present conditions educationally and economically unsound.

"Throughout the years, and until 1950, trades education at Saint Paul's was financed almost entirely by the state of Virginia and Brunswick County. All such monetary aid is not now available.

"The enrollment in that division since World War II consisted primarily of veterans studying under the GI Bill of Rights, so-called. Except for that fact the division of industrial education would have terminated itself some time ago. Few of our students or applicants are indicating a desire to be enrolled in the division.

"THE COLLEGE can more advantageously devote the resources, personnel, and facilities now preempted by industrial education, to other courses and objectives—and their substantial improvement and development.

"To a great extent the demand for trades education is being met by vocational high schools, vocational divisions of other high schools, and by purely technical or trades schools. Beyond that level,, those wishing to specialize for careers in the field or for teaching the trades are going to the institutes of technology, polytechnic colleges, or other specialized schools.

"There was a time and a need for trades education for Negroes, and Saint Paul's served a good purpose then in helping to meet that need at that time. But conditions have radically changed since those days. Mechanization and automation rendered obselete the training in many of the areas in which Saint Paul's was specializing. Enroolments dropped in that area of study and courses had to be discontinued. In our view, the termination of the program was inevitable."

SIMULTANEOUSLY with announcement of the decision to discontinue industrial education offerings, President McClenney revealed plans by the college to attain in the student body a wider geographical distribution and diversity in student backgrounds.

To this end he has appointed a faculty committee on student recruitment, headed by Dr. Walter N. Ridley, dean of the college. This committee will visit high schools in various states and, by interviews, examinations, and study of their scholastic records, offer students a chance to further their education at Saint Paul's

The college has launched a broadened program of scholarship awards and student aid through self-help activities which literally could make it possible for any qualified student of good character and ambition to finance his college work despite lack of personal or family funds.

COMMENTING ON this program, President McClenney declared:

"The cost of education everywhere is necessarily increasing all the time. Here at Saint Paul's we do not believe that any aspiring college student should be priced-out of an education.

"We are emphasizing the self-help approach during the immediate years ahead. including part-time campus work, in order to attract and make possible the enrollmen of outstanding youth.

22 Students Win Awards At St. Paul's Honors Day

P 13

LAWRENCEVILLE, Va. — Twenty two students, mainly seniors who will get their degrees on May 26th, were presented awards Friday (May 2) at the annual Honors Day ceremonies at Saint Paul's college.

The principal speaker was the president - elect of Livingstone college, Salisbury,, N. C. Dr. Samuel E. Duncan, now supervisor of Negro high schools for the North Carolina department of education.

The prizes and awards had a total monetary value of $520, with several being as high as $50 and $100.

THE WINNERS represented five states and the District of Columbia, Honors Day is an annual event during which outstanding undergraduates are recognized for high scholastic achievements, musical talent, athletic ability, personality, character, and leadership qualities.

Dr. Duncan lauded the Honors Day project "as indicative of Saint Paul's philosophy and emphasis on education for leadership."

He added: "We have learned to live easier; we have even learned to die easier. But it is a moot question as to whether we have learned to live happier. Out of the changes in our time have come moreo problems and out of the problems have come new responsibilities...The dynamics of all this is that a competitive society places a premium upon the superior achievement of those who have the ability and know - how."

AT ANOTHER point the speaker observed: "The further integration of qualified Negroes into industry, government, education, and the sports world proceeds at a rapid pace....Preparation for participation in this world rests largely on educational achievement..."

Pointing out how the Negro had come "from slavery to emancipation, from emancipation to segregation, and from segregation to the frontier of integration," Dr. Duncan concluded:

"Blind indeed must be the eyes of those who cannot see the dawn of that (new) day, and blinder still must be the eyes of those who do not sense their responsibility for the acceleration of the coming of that day by superior performance."

His speech was warmly applauded. Dr. Earl H. McClenny president of Saint Paul's introduced the speaker as a longtime friend, able civic worker, scholar, and educational administrator.

AT ANOTHER point in the program President McClenney acknowledged the presence in the audience of 168 seniors from half dozen high schools in the Southside Virginia area.

They were touring the campus and visiting classrooms, laboratories, and the buildings under the sponsorship of the graduate chapter here of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, with the assistance of the undergraduate chapter and other student leaders who served as guides.

Dr. McClenney warmly welcomed them to the college, which hosted them at a special luncheon, and the audience applauded the young visitors.

ONE OF THE highlights of the event was the singing of the a cappela choir of the college under the baton of music director Roland L. Allison. Their three numbers, "God of Our Father;" "The Creation," "Lift Up Your Heads," and "In Dat Great Gittin' Up Mornin'", drew thunderous applause. Insistent listeners prompted an encore.

The prizes and awards were presented by the dean of the college, Dr. Walter N. Ridley, who presided. The invocation and benediction were by Chaplain Alexander H. Easley. The singing of the Alma Mater and the academic recessional by the seniors and faculty climaxed the program.

Special to Journal and Guide

LAWRENCEVILLE, Va.—Several actions of significance were reported following the annual fall meeting of the board of trustees of Saint Paul's College, held in conjunction with the fall convocation formally marking the opening of the institution's 70th year. The session, held last Friday (Oct. 24), was attended by 15 of the 18 members of the board.

Of primary general interest was the taking of initial steps toward construction of a new and imposing building, long regarded as a priority need, and the election of three new trustees to fill a vacancy on the board and to succeed two members whose terms were expiring.

THE TRUSTEES authorized President Earl H. McClenney to arrange for a survey leading to the construction of a Health and Physical Education Building.

One of the facilities to be provided will be a gynasium to replace the present one in the Chicago Building.

Funds for the survey were appropriated at the meeting.

While no official announcement was made, subject to formal notification to the new trustees, it was learned that those added to the board were:

LESTER B. Granger, executive director of the National Urban League, New York City, and a nationally recognized leader in education, social work, and community affairs. He was one of the two Negro members on the National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools, and is a member of its successor organization, the National Citizens Council for Public Schools.

The Rev. Thomas B. Barrett, rector of the Robert E. Lee Memorial (P. E.) Church, Lexington, Va., one of the leading clergymen and scholars in the South.

Dr. John M. Hunter, dean of Virginia State College, Petersburg. He is a graduate of Cornell University, a member of numerous learned and honorary societies, and a top-ranking physicist.

THE RETIRING members of the board are Lt. Lawrence A. Oxley, Washington, D. C., and Dr. Harris Hart, of the Virginia State Department of Education, Richmond.

Another major step authorized by the trustees was the development of a plan to establish a retirement system for teachers. This will be placed in the hands of a faculty committee.

In the interest of faculty development, the trustees approved a program permitting members of the faculty to study for a year with substantial pay from the college, effectively immediately. Faculty quality is and has been a long-term objective of Saint Paul's administration, and has received special emphasis during the administration of President Earl H. McClenney.

• • •

ADDED TO the executive committee of the board was the Rev. Dr. Richard B. Martin, rector of Grace Episcopal Church, Norfolk, and one-time archdeacon for the diocese of southern Virginia of the P.E. Church.

Chairman of the committee is the Rev. Dr. G. MacLaren Brydon, Richmond, Va.

Present at the board meeting was the Rt. Rev. David Rose, recently ordained as suffragan bishop for the southern Virginia diocese of the P. E. Church.

Trustees present were the Rt. Rev. George P. Gunn, Norfolk, chairman; John Bates Jr., Richmond; the Rt. Rev. William A. Brown, Portsmouth; Dr. Brydon; the Venerable John M. Burgess, Boston, Mass.; Paul C. Edmunds, South Boston; the Rt. Rev. Robert F. Gibson, Richmond; John H. Graves, Brooklyn, N. Y.; the Rev. Moultrie Guerry, Raleigh, N. C.; Rev. Dr. Martin; William S. Peebles Jr., Lawrenceville, Va.; Oliver J. Sands, Richmond; B. W. Sebrell Jr., Lawrenceville; the Rev. John P. Williams, Richmond; and President McClenney.

The Rt. Rev. William H. Marmion, Roanoke, Va., was prevented from attending because of a previous engagement.

$4,583,117 BUDGET FOR SOUTHERN IS APPROVED

BATON ROUGE, La. — The Louisiana State Board of Education has approved a budget request of $4,583,117.00 for Southern University and A & M College, for the session of 1958-1959, according to a report from the President of the University.

Stated Southern's President, Dr. Felton G. Clark: "We are appreciative of Board's recognition of our problem as the country's largest college of our group, trying to procure additional, highly-qualified teachers at a time when trained personnel is scarce and where we are competing with America's industrial giants and America's greatest Universities for the best Negro minds to be found anywhere."

He added: "We also appreciate our Board's sensing that nothing should be spared in giving our teachers and students the amount and quality of instructional equipment demanded by these 'up to the minute' times. Nothing should be held back now, when the very security of the United States and the free world are at stake." He continued: "That Negro scientists, engineers, research workers, humanists and soldiers are increasingly becoming apart of our national defense structure makes the highest and best education of all members of the group a practical necessity."

First call on the funds that Southern hopes to receive will be for additional teachers including twenty who wil lbe brought in at a professorial level with the minimum academic training of the Doctor of Philosophy degree. This will give Southern approximately eighty persons who possess the Ph. D.

Supplementing this request for a maintenance appropriation of $4,583,117.00 at a future date will be a request for several millions of dollars for capital outlay. This request will be for educational buildings and equipment, demanded by Southern's 5,000-odd students and the additional ones anticipated next year. Southern's enrollment has outrun the predictions of all of the surveys that have ben made in Louisiana in the past ten years.

"This means," stated J. J. Hedgemon, registrar, "that expanded facilities are a must if the State expects us to provide an acceptable quality of college training for the students who want to come to us."

Southern U. Becomes Largest Negro University

CHICAGO—Southern University in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, has become the nation's largest Negro University, and it's 900-acre plant is still growing to provide for the enrollment expected, relates Ebony in the April issue.

Southern with an enrollment of 5,745 students is in the midst of a building program that will cost seven and a half million dollars, and construction crews are constantly at work.

Though hampered by over-crowded conditions, Southern boasts a widely diversified curriculum, including a comprehensive teacher-training program, courses in physical and social sciences, business, engineering, law and a graduate school authorized to award the master's degree in education.

Academically, Southern has two programs aimed at giving students individual attention. The first allows students to follow a liberal arts course for the first two years and then branch to major fields. The second consentrates on superior students by making sure that the top five percent of the freshmen study under the best teachers.

Pending social changes in the South spell no threat to Southern's future says Ebony. Southern's president, Felton G. Clark, predicts that his school "will continue to grow like most public schools and the private ones that have finances."

Southern's current operating budget includes a $3,690,000 appropriation from the state, plus additional auxiliary funds totaling $1,200,000.

Texas Southern Gets $88,000 Science Foundation Grant

HOUSTON — The National Science Foundation has awarded Texas Southern University a grant of $88,000.00 to support a Summer Science Institute at the University for high school teachers of science and mathematics. Last year's grant of $72,600.00 was increased by $15,400.00 to permit an increase in enrollees and to bring in outstanding authorities in the areas of Biology, Physics, Mathematics and Chemistry as lecturers and consultants.

The Science Institute is designed not only to help high school teachers in science by re-orienting them in the basic principles and recent advances in their respective subject matter areas, but it is the further hope that this orientation will provide the stimulation needed to interest teachers of science in pursuing careers in the sciences and in mathematics by bringing them in contact with active and creative scientists.

Dr Samuel M Nabrit, President of Texas Southern University has appointed Dr Robert J Terry, head, Biology department, as director of the Institute. He will succeed Dr Alberta Seaton last years director.

TSU Designated As Testing Center For 1959

HOUSTON — Texas Southern University has been designated as a testing center for the 1959 nationwide administration of the National Teacher Examinations next February, Dr M. N. Cooper, Director of Educational Testing announced today.

College seniors preparing to teach, and teachers applying for positions in school systems which encourage or require applicants to submit their scores on the National Teacher Examinations along with their other credentials are eligible to take the tests. The examinations are prepared and administered annually by Educational Testing Service, Princeton, New Jersey.

The designation of Texas Southern University as a testing center for these examinations will give prospective teachers in this area an opportunity to compare their performance on thse examinations with approximately 10,000 candidates throughout the country who will be participating in the similar tests administered on February 7, 1959 throughout the nation, Dr Cooper said.

At the one-day testing session, a candidate may take the Common Examination, which includes tests in Professional Information, General Culture, English Expression, and Non-Verbal Reasoning. In addition, each candidate may take one or two of the eleven Optional Examinations which are designed to demonstrate mastery of subject matter in the fields in which he may be assigned to teach.

Applications for the examinations along with a Bulletin of Information describing registration procedure and containing sample test questions may be secured from the National Teacher Examination Center, Educational Testing Service, 20 Nassau Street, Princeton, New Jersey. Prospective teachers planning to take the test should secure an application blank and a bulletin of Information promptly, Dr Cooper advised.

WHITE MINISTER
PASTOR, INDEPENDENT MISSIONARY
BAPTIST TEMPLE

White pastor applies to Negro school

HOUSTON, Tex., Sept. 16—(AP)—A white minister, who said his actions would show "the rights of Negroes as well as those of white people are being taken away," tried to enroll yesterday at a Negro college.

The pastor of the Independent Missionary Baptist Temple, who has opposed school integration termed his actions an illustration of stupidity because "there are plenty of fine white schools in which I could enroll."

EVERETT O. BELL, registrar of Texas Southern University, said the Rev. E. H. Munroe's application will be handled like any other. He said he thought he would be admitted if he established himself as scholastically qualified.

The registrar said several white students enrolled at the college last year.

The minister was accompanied by about 25 placard and flag carrying members of his congregation. One placard said, "The Supreme Court is not the word of God."

"There's no problem there," the pastor said. "I just stopped payment of the check I gave them."

White Pastor Quits Attending Negro University

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP)—A white segregationist pastor who enrolled at Texas Southern University said he is no longer attending classes at the school originally set up as a Negro institution.

The Rev. E. A. Munroe, pastor of the Independent Missionary Baptist Temple, said he enrolled to demonstrate that integration was not wanted by Negroes.

He said he had expected his application for enrollment to be turned down. The school accepted him, however, pending receipt of his scholastic qualifications.

Dr. S. M. Nabrit, president of the university, said the minister could receive 70 per cent of his fees back if he withdraws before the end of this week.

ONE FOR, ONE AGAINST SEGREGATION

Two White Ministers Enroll In Negro School

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP) — Two white ministers, one a segregationist and the other an integrationist, started classwork Thursday at Texas Southern University, a state school for Negroes.

The Rev. E. A. Munroe paid $81 in registration fees Thursday morning and went to afternoon classes.

The Rev. Clayton McMahill attended morning classes after enrolling without the fanfare that had accompanied Munroe's registration Monday.

Munroe, an avowed segregationist, is pastor of the Missionary Baptist Temple here. McMahill is pastor of St. Thomas Methodist Church.

Munroe told newsmen he had sought enrollment to show it is as ridiculous for a white person to enroll at a Negro school as it is for a Negro to enroll at a white school.

McMahill said he hopes to set an example in favor of integrating schools.

"Rev. Munroe was trying to make a laughing stock out of the decision of the Supreme Court," McMahill said. "It was a terrific insult to the students and faculty. The stand of the Methodist Church is integration through all the agencies of the church."

Two members of the Texas Southern Board of Directors said Wednesday Munroe enrolled for political purposes and should not be admitted.

43 Texas Colleges Have Dropped Bars

Special to Journal and Guide

AUSTIN, Tex. — A survey recently completed here shows that 35 previously all-white Texas colleges now have colored students and that eight others have announced that they no longer have segregated student bodies.

About one per cent of the student population of the 35 colleges is colored, the survey shows. There are 750 colored students enrolled in them with an overall student-body of 65,000.

OF THE EIGHT institutions that have dropped segregation, several have had colored students but report none enrolled now.

The desegregation of some colleges in the Lone Star State is not limited to the classrooms. At the University of Texas' Galveston medical branch, 22 colored pupils are among the 650 enrolled and a colored resident surgeon is on the staff. At North Texas State, two of the school's 133 colored students are on the varsity football team.

THE UNIVERSITY of Texas has the largest number of colored students, 165, compared with 15,925 white.

Schools which have desegregated include state junior and senior colleges and church-supported schools. A number of Catholic and Protestant colleges now admit Negro students although three church-supported universities — Southern Methodist, Texas Christian and Baylor — have desegregated only their graduate schools.

TEXAS A. AND M. and Rice Institute which is a privately endowed school are among those still maintaining segregation.

Most of the desegregated colleges are in central, west and south Texas, but Lamar Tech at Beaumont in southeast Texas, near the Louisiana border, now has 57 colored students. Prosegregation groups there put up picket lines but were unable to halt integration.

43 Texas colleges drop student color barriers

AUSTIN, Texas — The color bars have been dropped in 43 Texas colleges and universities, according to the results of a survey released last week.

Approximately 750 colored students are currently attending 35 formerly all-white Texas colleges and universities while eight other institutions state that they have dropped segregation, although they have not yet enrolled colored students.

The University of Texas' Galveston medical branch has 22 colored among its 600 students and includes a colored resident surgeon on its staff.

THE LARGEST number of colored students, 165 out of a total student body of 16,090, is enrolled at the University of Texas.

North Texas State, which has two colored players on its football team, is the largest of those which have colored athletes on their teams. There, 133 colored pupils are enrolled as against 5,855 white.

Integration In Texas Colleges Works Well

HOUSTON — According to a report, an estimated 750 Negroes are attending integrated colleges throughout the state of Texas, including the largest cities in the state, Houston, Dallas, Fort Worth, San Antonio, Austin, Beaumont and Corpus Christi.

Although the Texas Dental Branch is the only integrated college here in Houston, there are two others whose board of regents have voted to drop their policies of segregation. They are the University of St Thomas, a white Catholic school and Texas Southern University.

Some of the colleges were opened to Negroes as the results of litigations brought on by Negro plaintiffs and some of them were opened voluntarily, since the decree by the High Tribunal.

The University of Texas admitted Negroes 10 years ago on order of the Supreme Court, climaxing the Heman Sweatt case. The school now has 163 Negro students, followed closely by San Antonio's, North Texas College with a 133.

Sna Antonio also has four other integrated colleges including Main, Trinity College with 70 Negroes, Our Lady of the Lake, 26, St Mary's University, 20 to 30, and St Phillips, formerly an all-Negro college, who now has 200 white students enrolled.

In addition to the University of Texas, there are three other integrated colleges at Austin. They are Austin Presbyterian Seminary, St Edwards University and the Episcopal Seminary of the South West. Concordia College at Austin, has a policy to admit Negroes. San Antonio has two colleges which admit Negroes, but at the present none has enrolled. They are DeMazenod Scholastic and St Anthony's Junior Seminary.

Colleges intigratted in other large cities are the University of Dallas, Galveston Medical Branch of the University of Texas, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Del Mar College, Corpus Christi and Lamar State College, where pro-segregationists fought to stop integration at the school, but failed.

There are an estimated 20 other integrated colleges in the state.

Tougaloo Southern Christian College Received $14,866.90 From UNCF

An allocation of $14,866.90 has been received by Tougaloo Southern Christian College from the United Negro College Fund, President Samuel C. Kincheloe announced today, January 7, 1958.

This is the third and final allocation to Tougaloo Southern Christian College from proceeds of the 1957 UNCF nation-wide campaign," President Kincheloe said. "This amount brings the total received by Tougaloo Southern Christian College from the 1957 national appeal to $37,339.54."

Tougaloo is one of the 33 private, accredited member institutions of the United Negro College Fund. The first of America's education efforts, the College Fund has conducted annual campaign to help meet the early operating costs of its member schools since 1944.

"The financial aid received each year from the UNCF by Tougaloo Southern Christian represents approximately 8 per cent of its budget, or that amount not met by income from endowment, tuition and recurring grants," Pres. Kincheloe said.

During the current year, UNCF allocations have been used principally to provide scholarship and work aid for exceptional students who otherwise would not be able to continue their education; to purchase laboratory and classroom equipment; and to maintain a high salary scale. This enables the college to have an excellent teaching staff.

Professor Under Fire

Students Defy Segregation Law In Mississippi!

JACKSON, Miss.—Despite rabid barking from segregationists, approximately 30 white students defied tradition and visited a social science class at Tougaloo Southern Christian College.

The visiting white students hailed from nearby Millsaps College, a Methodist institution. Dr. George Maddox, chairman of the sociology department at Millsaps, acted as moderator for the meeting which he opened with "We are here to explore what makes you tick and to allow you to make this exploration with us."

• One white co-ed stated, "So many of our people don't know anything about Negroes except what cheap politicians tell them."

• Another Millsaps girl said, "Millsaps probably has more in common with Tougaloo than the other white colleges of the state."

A white youth quipped, "The races have no basic differences."

HOWEVER, SOME of the white students present disagreed with these views and some even spoke out against Negroes. It was also noted that the white and Negro students segregated themselves in the classroom.

• But, one Negro co-ed stated, "I would like to see it published that there are high-class, middle-class and low-class Negroes, and that the low-class is in the majority just like among whites, but the low classes are always to be seen first."

Another Negro youth said, "at least I found out tonight that we can communicate."

The meeting came about as the result of a controversy on extra-curricular programs on religious themes at Millsaps. Prof. Ernest Borinski, a white member of the Tougaloo faculty, had spoke at Millsaps and defended the Negro's desire for integration. The Borinski letter brought about not replies from the local daily paper and the dispute was on.

WHITE PASTORS ENROLLED AT NEGRO SCHOOL

Houston, Tex., Sept. 18 [Special]—Two white ministers enrolled Thursday at Texas Southern University, a state Negro school, apparently with opposing motives and despite protests in the case of one.

The Rev. E. A. Munroe, pastor of the Missionary Baptist temple, completed his enrollment by paying registration fees. A segregationist, he said this case to the Supreme court he enrolled to show that integration is foolish and that Negroes as well as whites lose their freedom by having forced integration.

The Rev. Clayton McMahill, pastor of St. Thomas Methodist church, said he enrolled to "set an example in favor of integrating our schools" after Munroe tried to make a laughing stock out of the Supreme court's decision. Munroe had said he would carry if the Negro school kept him out.

TWO ENROLL AT NEGRO COLLEGE

White Ministers Objectives Differ

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP) — Two white ministers, one a segregationist and the other an integrationist, started classwork Thursday at Texas Southern University, a state school for Negroes.

"Rev. Munroe was trying to make a laughing stock out of the decision of the Supreme Court," McMahill said. "It was a terrific insult to the students and faculty.

Two members of the Texas Southern Board of Directors said Wednesday Munroe enrolled for political purposes and should not be admitted.

Dr. S. M. Nabritt, Texas Southern president, said Thursday, however, Munroe would be accepted and treated exactly as any other student "so long as he abides by the rules and regulations of the university."

Something Good in Arkansas

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

An editorial in the current Journal of the National Medical Association by Dr. W. Montague Cobb reminds us that all is not dark and doleful in Arkansas, racially speaking.

It points out, what many may have forgotten, that the medical school of the University of Arkansas in September, 1948, became the first of the Southern medical schools to change its racial policy when it admitted Dr. Edith Mae Irby, treated her fairly and awarded her an internship in the University Hospital in Little Rock.

We are told further that since Dr. Irby's graduation in 1952, seven Negroes have received medical degrees from the University of Arkansas and eight are presently enrolled there.

Five years ago, in 1953, the Pulaski County Medical Society in Little Rock voted to admit Negro physicians, and the following year the Arkansas Baptist Hospital in Little Rock admitted four Negro physicians to its staff.

We just thought you would like to be reminded of this other side of the educational picture in Arkansas and Little Rock: that is, there are other aspects of race relations there [illegible]

First Negro May Enroll At Florida U

GAINESVILLE (AP)—The University of Florida may enroll the first Negro student in its history Monday.

Should the prospective student complete his registration, he will undergo orientation in the college of law. It would mark a breakthrough of the segregation barrier which has prevailed at state operated colleges and universities.

A university spokesman three weeks ago disclosed a Negro had qualified to enter this fall but refused to identify him or to elaborate on a brief official announcement saying a Negro applicant had met entrance requirements and "in keeping with past university policy the names of the students qualifying or failing to qualify are not disclosed."

Virgil Hawkins of Daytona Beach, who has been trying to get in the university's college of law for eight years, said he had not heard from the university.

Carl R. Osborne of Jacksonville said he had been notified of his score but would give out no information about it. He said, however, he had not applied for admission to the University of Florida.

The University of Florida has never had a Negro student but in June Federal Judge Dozier Devane of Tallahassee ruled that Negroes could not be barred from the university's graduate schools because of color.

A formal order admitting Hawkins to the law school has been delayed by Florida supreme court until it could be shown that no public mischief would result. Devane said it would be improper to include such a provision in his order.

Select Negro For U Of Ill Trustee Post

(AP)

The Democratic state convention broke tradition on two fronts last Wednesday when it nominated State Rep Richard A. Harewood (D-Chicago), a Negro for trustee of the University of Illinois.

It marked the first time either major party has nominated a Negro for the post, and the first time party leaders flouted the "recommended list" of three nominees customarily offered by the powerful University of Illinois Alumni association.

The association had recommended Richard J. Nelson of Evanston, onetime administrative assistant to former Gov Adlai E. Stevenson. Nelson was dropped to make room for Harewood through the insistence of Chicago's Mayor Richard J. Daley.

The word had spread about the convention floor that Chicago would get one of the three trusteeships nominations, but the name of the nominee selected was not revealed until a few minutes before the session ended.

Ole Miss Sending Application To Negro Professor

OXFORD, Miss. (Special) — University of Mississippi officials today prepared to send application forms to Negro Professor Clennon King.

Registrar Robert Ellis said he received a letter from King yesterday in which the ousted Alcorn A&M history professor asked about admission to a summer session at the University. Ellis said King indicated in his letter he wants to study for a doctorate in Southern History.

He claimed the University offers no doctorate in the course but said "we're handling it as a letter for application and are sending him the forms."

Ellis said the forms will be mailed today.

King announced Sunday he has asked for admission to the University.

Negro Applies For Admission To The U. Of Mississippi

GULFPORT, Miss. — A Negro teacher has applied for admission to the all-white University of Mississippi.

Rev. Clennon King, professor at Alcorn A&M College for Negroes, applied last week. Last year King incurred the ire of Alcorn students by a series of articles criticizing the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

At the time, more than 500 students walked out of the school because of King's newspaper articles which claimed the NAACP had done nothing locally for southern Negroes.

King's disclosure of plans to enter Mississippi to seek a Ph.D. degree came in a sermon entitled, "The Real Reason I Was Fired." An estimated 450 persons heard him at St. Andrew African Methodist Episcopal church where he is pastor.

King said he was fired as professor of history at Alcorn because he refused to stand those embarrased hypocrites, my freedom."

King also claimed he had never expressed hatred of integration and had never voiced any malice toward the NAACP.

First Negro to Attend U. of Virginia Sees Need for 'Massive Assistance'

By Susanna McBee
Staff Reporter

A soft-spoken young lawyer in Alexandria leaned back in his red leather chair and talked of the need for "massive assistance—not massive resistance."

Gregory H. Swanson, 34, was the first Negro to attend the University of Virginia. He was admitted in 1950 after a 3-judge Federal Court reversed a rejection on racial grounds by the University Board of Visitors.

The Court order was described as the "decree which at a stroke shattered Virginia precedent." In the 1956-57 school year there were 11 Negroes at the University, seven of them in the Medical School. No figures are available on last year's Negro enrollment.

Debate Advocated

Swanson says Virginia communities should have committees on racial understanding where leading citizens of both races could discuss problems relating to integration.

"Such an arrangement would remove the necessity for expensive and protracted litigation," he said.

"There is a great need for new lines of communication between the races because most whites in the South have a stereotyped notion of what Negroes will do in an integrated situation."

Referring to Arlington which is under Federal Court order to admit seven Negroes to white schools, Swanson said:

"When groups of people are separated over a period of time because of an enforced color bar, there are initial problems. When the two groups come together, there will be play of ideas and emotions.

People Are People

"But if there is a respect for human personality by both groups, they will find that people are people. From the contact a mutual cooperation and understanding will grow.

"What Negroes want most is to feel that they belong in the mainstream of American life."

Swanson's story at the University of Virginia really began before he had received his law degree from Howard University in 1948. He had decided he wanted to teach at Howard, and was practicing law in Martinsville, Va., when he applied to the University. Swanson hoped to get a Master's degree in law, which is a prerequisite for teaching.

He Was Mistaken

His application was "a personal initiation — I never thought that a lawsuit would be necessary." Swanson was relying on cases in which the Supreme Court had ordered Missouri, Oklahoma and Texas to admit Negroes to institutions of higher learning. But he was rejected by the university.

"Then I felt that I had a moral responsibility to have the question determined," he recalls.

On registration day Swanson said he realized "there might be reactions, no matter how covert, to my admission, but I felt I was adequately prepared to meet them.

"There was no incident, however. I was well received and courteously treated. Swanson did research on conflict of laws, more particularly applying to insurance contracts.

The attorney said he "fully participated in classroom discussions and used all campus facilities—cafeterias, libraries. I just picked my classroom seat at random as everyone else did. I attended concerts, lectures, and football games but never attempted to attend any social affairs.

After he left the campus he resumed his Martinsville practice. In 1955 he married the former Betty Oliver. The Swansons, who live at 220 Hamilton st. nw., have a year-old daughter, Karen Micheyl. Swanson has just started practicing law at 303 N. Alfred st., Alexandria.

Va. Polytechnic Institute Has First Negro Grad

NORFOLK, Va. (ANP)— Charlie Yates, the son of Mrs. Annie Yates, Norfolk, received his engineering degree from Virginia Polytechnic last week, becoming the first Negro graduate from VPI and the first Negro to be graduated from any major southern engineering institution.

An honor graduate of Booker T. Washington High School, Yates entered VPI in 1954 "on his own", without benefit of scholarship. His final report card at VPI showed five A's and one B.

One of six honor students in the class, and one of two honor students from Norfolk, he was a member of three honor fraternities: Pi Kappa Phi, national honor fraternity secretary, Pi Tau Sigma, national mechanical engineering fraternity; and recording secretary of Tau Beta Pi.

Yates will work during the summer with the engine division of Fairchild Engineering and Airplane Corp., New York. He has been granted tuition scholarship and teaching assistantship at California Institute of Technology where he will begin work on his master's degree in the fall.

Methodist Bishop Hits Ignorance!

PETERSBURG, Va.—The Rev. Edgar A. Love, Bishop of the diocese of Baltimore of the Methodist Church, told an audience at Virginia State College here that "one great force which is pushing man relentlessly toward world suicide is ignorance."

Dr. Love said he was not referring to ignorance in mathematics, physics, chemistry, or of ignorance of the accumulated technology which enables us to unlock nature's most secret treasures. "We are ignorant," he said, "of the fact that race and culture are merely outward differences and that man is our fellowman wherever found."

BISHOP LOVE was the guest speaker at Founders Day at the college.

The Founders Day observance began with the campus memorial at 10:30 A.M., presided over by President Robert P. Daniel.

First Degrees At Norfolk VSC

"New Duties With Gains"--Thurman

By THOMAS L. DABNEY

Dr. Howard Thurman told the first graduating class to get degrees at Norfolk Division of Virginia State college Tuesday night that as colored people move out of the ghettos into integration in American life they must accept more responsibilities. He urged the graduates to work in their communities for freedom and a sense of responsibility.

Speaking on "The Meaning of Freedom" to the largest audience to attend commencement exercises of the Division at the Center Theater, Dr. Thurman said "this is a period in human history when freedom is on the lips of many people." He added: "The desire, interest in and the quest for freedom is as old as self consciousness."

TO ILLUSTRATE the danger of allowing adverse circumstances to cause an individual to lose his sense of option in the struggle for freedom, Dr. Thurman told a story about a colored man who was strumming his guitar and singing "I've been down so long, being down don't bother me." He said this man had allowed his environment to rob him of his sense of option and that such a condition was actually slavery.

Dr. Thurman, who is dean of Marsh Chapel and professor of spiritual resources and disciplines at Boston university was introduced by Dr. Lyman B. Brooks, director of Norfolk Division. His address was the highlight of the 22nd annual commencement of the Division which this year awarded its first degrees.

DR. R. P. Daniel, president of Virginia State college at Petersburg, brought greetings to the graduates and their parents. Dr. Brooks made the commencement statement. The invocation was by Dr. Samuel A. Wilson of New Calvary Baptist church. The college choir sang under the direction of Noah F. Ryder and the college band played under the direction of J. J. Ballou. The benediction was pronounced by Dr. Harvey N. Johnson of Ebenezer Baptist church, Portsmouth.

Virginia Union To Grant $19,189 In Scholarships

RICHMOND, Va. — During the current semester, 235 Virginia Union students will receive a total of $19,168 in scholarship grants from the University, Dr. T. H. Henderson, dean of the college, disclosed. This represents three out of eleven students enrolled.

The breakdown in distribution is as follows: Twenty-four band and choir members will receive $1,100 in music scholarships. For athletic scholarships $3,940 will be given to 22 athletes, six of whom are also included in the 186 students receiving from $40 to $140 for having maintained a "B" average during the semester.

IN ADDITION, nine students who are close relatives of university employees will receive a total of $1,313 as employees' rebates, making a total of $19,168.

Dean Henderson said that in the past, university scholarships have been awarded on the basis of grades attained in high school, rank in class, and recommendations from principals and counselors.

HE EXPLAINED that in the future an additional criterion would be added, since the University is now one of 24 United Negro College Fund institutions participating in the Co-operative Intercollegiate Examination Program.

Under this program, pre-entrance examinations will be given in February to high school seniors in 200 centers scattered all over the south. To be eligible for a scholarship, students entering participating institutions must have made a satisfactory score on the CIEP tests.

The prominent Richmond attorney brushed aside a stack of legal papers on his desk, leaned back, and elaborated on the three - point program. He said the $10,000 was the chapter's quota for founders' Day to be held at Virginia Union on February 11. The scholarship fund is to make a higher education available for Richmond youngsters who lack the necessary funds.

Plan Rickey Fieldhouse At Wilberforce University

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 3-15-58

WILBERFORCE, Ohio — (ANP) — William "Bill" Veeck, the second big league baseball owner to sign a Negro athlete to a major league contract, talked with reporters and spectators at the 102nd Wilberforce university Founders' Day about the $150,000 athletic field and fieldhouse to be built at the school in honor of Branch Rickey. Veeck and baseball great Jackie Robinson will co-chairman the drive.

The athletic field announcement highlighted a full day of activities during which Associate Justice of the Ohio Supreme Court Charles B. Zimmerman delivered the principal address.

Veeck who insisted that Jackie Robinson and Larry Doby were not signed by the majors because they were Negroes but because they were good athletes and profitable baseball investments, named baseball dignitatires and nationall famous personalities as members of the athletic field committee.

Aside from Veeck and Robinson, the co-chairman, the list includes: Abe Saperstein, of the Harlem Glove Trotters; Fritz Pollard, New York Public Relations Consultant; Frank Lane, Cleveland Indians; Charles A. Comiskey, Chicago White Soxs; W. C. Handy, musical composer; Val Washington, member of the Republican National Committee; George Sisler, Pittsburgh Pirates; Bill Nunn, Pittsburgh Courier; Dr. Alfred Thomas; Judge F. W. (Duke) Slater, football All-American and Robert Cyrus Laughter, jr., Dayton industrialist.

Said Veeck, "Rickey is responsible almost entirely for the entrance of Negroes into professional sports." He added, 'I think Althea Gibson (leading tennis star and also a Negro) is an outgrowth of Branch Rickey's work.'

While the meeting served to kick-off the drive for athletic field funds, $12,000 has already been pledged toward the $150,000 goal according to Luther White, executive director of the Wilberforce university Foundation.

Law Group Votes To Censure Units Banning Negroes

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 3 (AP)—The Assn. of American Law Schools voted 80-14 here to censure its members who refuse to admit qualified Negro students.

The action came at the final session of the organization's three-day convention. The association—with support from the Pacific Coast and most of the South—turned down a proposal to expel members who refuse entrance on purely racial grounds.

That proposition was rejected by amending the resolution to read "censure" instead of "expel." Dean Milton D. Green, Washington University, St. Louis, offered the amendment as "a compromise with which we can

He was supported by Dean Elvin R. Latty, Duke University, Durham, N. C., who observed "discrimination is unsound, unjust and un-Christian."

Named to the executive committee were Frank J. Trelease, Wyoming University, and Thomas W. Christopher, Emory University, Emory, Ga.

State Keeping Up Its Resistance

By JOHN L. BOYLES
Capitol Bureau Chief

TALLAHASSEE—Negroes were all but assured Monday that some members of their race will be ordered admitted to Florida's two big all-White universities next fall. It may be decided today.

Federal Judge Dozier DeVane indicated that such an order by him is hardly more than a formality and ordered attorneys for the state to present evidence why they refuse to agree to such an order.

DeVane has already said the law is settled and segregation in the two state universities—University of Florida at Gainesville and Florida State University at Tallahassee—is illegal.

He said the Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans and the U.S. Supreme Court decisions have given him no alternative and his order opening the schools to Negroes may come this morning.

The racial barrier was cracked Monday in a surprise turn of events.

Virgil D. Hawkins, 50-year-old Negro of Daytona Beach, gave up in his nine-year legal battle to enter the University of Florida Law School.

His attorneys, retained by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, decided to pass up a long trial over Hawkins' qualifications but they asked Judge DeVane to issue an order that no applicant could be barred from a state university solely because of his race.

Assistant Attorney General Ralph Odom, representing the Florida Board of Control which sets the administrative policies for state universities, said "we must respectfully object to the order."

This came when DeVane refused to say the board would not be in contempt if it exercised discretion in not following the order should riots or other disturbances follow a Negro's admittance.

DeVane, veteran jurist who has already announced his retirement, smiled and then advised Odom that he could not anticipate in his order that "public mischief" might result.

DeVane said, however, he will take judicial notice of a ruling by the Florida Supreme Court that in its opinion, public harm might occur as a result of school integration at this time.

Odom told the court the Board of Control has a study under way to determine if this condition still exists. The survey being conducted by Gov. LeRoy Collins' special race relations commission is expected to be completed by September.

DeVane recessed court until 9:30 a.m. today to give the state time to organize possible evidence showing an order should not be issued at this time to end segregation.

Besides Hawkins, there are 85 applications from Negroes for amission to the University of Florida.

U. Of Florida Grad Schools To Open Doors To Negroes

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 18 (AP)—University of Florida graduate schools were opened to qualified Negroes today by a Federal District Court order that broke the solid front of segregation in this Southern state.

Judge Dozier Devane enjoined the Board of Control from enforcing any policy, custom or usage in the graduate schools that restricted admissions to white persons only.

The order climaxed a nine-year legal fight by the Nationl Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People to break down racial barriers at the all-white institution.

The order applied only to the University of Florida at Gainesville. Asst. Atty. Gen. Ralph E. Odum said a separate suit will have to be brought to open the doors of Florida State University, the state's other white university, to Negroes unless the Board of Control decides to do so.

The 74-year-old Devane said in a memorandum opinion that he had no alternative but to issue the order in view of U. S. Supreme Court holdings on the subject.

At present there is no integration anywhere in Florida. A case is pending in federal court at Miami which seeks to open the public schools to Negroes.

U.S. Curb Asked on Mixing

Collins Wants Careful Timing

By JOHN L. BOYLES
Capitol Bureau Chief

TALLAHASSEE — Gov. LeRoy Collins said Thursday a federal court order opening the University of Florida graduate schools to Negroes confirmed "what I have always felt."

The governor told his news conference that the action shows conclusively that the doctrine of interposition — whereby the state interposes its sovereignty to avoid complying with a federal order—is a "meaningless hoax."

Interposition has been suggested by some strong pro-segregationists in the South as a means of keeping white and Negro pupils in separate schools.

But Collins called anew for federal legislation to curb integration in any area where "it might be improvident at the time."

Indicating he foresees many problems in the process of gradual integration of the schools, Collins said he hopes Congress will consider his proposal for creating state commissions with authority to determine the "when, where and how" of desegregating.

Collins said it should be such commissions rather then the courts themselves who decide how the court decisions should be implemented.

The governor said the state civil rights commission now being set up will serve only as an advisory group to the federal civil rights agency. He recommended that Congress establish state agencies by law with broad powers to carry out the court decisions desegregating schools.

The governor strongly opposed an interposition resolution adopted by the 1957 special legislative session, and said he would have vetoed the action if he could.

Collins said he thought the Legislature had wasted its time in the row over interposition. He called it "much to do over nothing.

In the light of the federal court decision this week, Collins said he would not try to predict the future of the law school at Florida A. & M. University for Negroes.

Asked whether it would be economically sound to maintain the school, Collins said, "that is one of the problems the Board of Control will have to examine."

In other matters the governor said:

He considers the Road Department's financial position to be sound despite State Auditor Bryan Willis' criticism that the department had failed to maintain a cash reserve.

He has not decided to appoint Miami labor leader Howard Walton as State Milk Administrator, but considers Walton capable, and will probably name him to the $8,400-a-year job if the Milk Commission recommends his appointment.

He agrees with a legislative subcommittee that there is a pressing need for a new central structure in Florida's historic Capitol building.

Negro Hints Interest in FSU Study

TALLAHASSEE, June 20 (AP)—A graduate at Florida A. & M. University for Negroes today indicated an interest in enrolling at Florida State University, two days after a federal court judge outlawed segregation in University of Florida graduate schools.

The unidentified Negro obtained a catalog of graduate courses offered at FSU.

But Dr. Broward Culpepper, secretary of the State Board of Control, said the student made no immediate attempt to apply for admission at FSU.

FSU was not involved in the suit that knocked aside racial barriers at the University of Florida graduate schools and the Board of Control has taken no action to alter its policy against racial integration.

Culpepper said the Negro student asked that he not be identified and that he represented no integrationist group.

Federal Judge Dozier DeVane Wednesday struck down race as a bar to admission in the University of Florida graduate schools.

University Integration Writ Delayed

Herald Bureau

TALLAHASSEE — Although he postponed issuing a formal order for several days, Federal Judge Dozier DeVane Tuesday indicated he will probably order a "gradualism" in the process of school integration.

Judge DeVane said it would probably start next fall at the college post-graduate level. He asked officials of the State Board of Control if this could be done in an orderly manner. They thought it could.

The judge, who soon is to retire, tossed a barb at the U. S. Supreme Court when he said the tribunal "changed constitutional provisions with reference to state control of public education."

FLORIDA U. UNITS OPEN TO NEGROES

Federal Court Tells Graduate Schools to End Restrictions in 9-Year Bias Fight

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 18 (AP)—University of Florida graduate schools were opened to qualified Negroes today by a Federal District Court order.

Judge Dozier Devane enjoined the board of control from enforcing any policy, custom or usage in the graduate schools that restricted admissions to white persons only.

The order was the climax of a nine-year legal fight by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to break down racial barriers at the all-white institution.

The order applied only to the University of Florida at Gainesville. Assistant Attorney General Ralph E. Odum said that a separate suit would have to be brought to open the doors of Florida State University, the state's other white university, to Negroes unless the board of control decises to do so.

Judge Devane, 74 years old, said in a memorandum opinion that he had no alternative but to issue the order in view of the United States Supreme Court holdings on the subject.

At present there is no integration anywhere in Florida A case is pending in Federa Court at Miami that seeks to open the public schools to Negroes.

Court Opens Florida U. To Negroes

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP)—Eighteen University of Florida graduate schools were opened to qualified Negroes Wednesday by a federal district court order that broke the solid front of segregation in this southern state.

Judge Dozier Devane enjoined the Board of Control from enforcing any policy, custom or usage in the graduate schools that restricted admissions to white persons only.

Gov. Collins forecast that the board of control will now remove racial barriers at the Florida State University graduate schools.

The governor told a news conference he doubted that the decision of Federal District Judge Dozier Devane opening graduate schools at the University of Florida would be appealed.

The governor rejected a suggestion of Sen. Randolph Hodges of Cedar Key, a strong segregation supporter, that a special session of the legislature be called in further attempts to maintain strict segregation at the University of Florida.

"I have no intention of calling a special session," Collins said.

The court order climaxed a nine-year legal fight by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People to break down racial barriers of Florida at Gainesville.

The 74-year-old Devane said in a memorandum opinion that he had no alternative but to issue the order in view of U.S. Supreme Court holdings on the subject.

TROUBLE PROVISO ASKED

University Race Ruling Postponed

TALLAHASSEE, June 16 (AP)—Federal Judge Dozier DeVane came close today to ordering the University of Florida and Florida State University opened to all qualified Negroes.

But he held up on handing down the order when Assistant Atty. Gen. Ralph E. Odum rejected a proposed stipulation to this effect because the order gave the Board of Control no discretion to bar Negroes if disorders were threatened.

DeVane then ordered a recess in the hearing until 9:30 a.m. tomorrow when Odum was instructed to put on testimony in the class action brought by attorneys for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

The hearing tomorrow will be on the proposed order drawn by Judge DeVane which would state flatly the board could not deny admission to the state universities solely on racial grounds.

The trial got under way this morning with testimony relative to the 9-year-fight by Virgil Hawkins, Daytona Beach Negro, to gain admission to the University of Florida law school.

But the case took an unexpected twist in mid-afternoon when Judge DeVane announced he was about ready to hold that the 50-year-old Hawkins should make a new application to get into the law school so that the Board of Control could pass upon his over-all qualifications.

Class Action Cited

When Hawkins' attorneys objected, Judge DeVane said the facts in the Hawkins case did not present a justifiable issue.

One of Hawkins' attorneys, then reminded that the suit was a class action brought in behalf of all qualified Negroes and they would be willing to drop the Hawkins matter if an order could be entered enjoining general policy against Negroes.

Odum said the Board of Control had no policy barring Negro applicants on racial grounds since the Florida Supreme Court and U.S. Supreme Court had ruled out school segregation.

But he reminded that the State Supreme Court had delayed handing down a formal order admitting Hawkins to the law school until it could be shown he could be admitted without causing public mischief.

Odum urged Judge DeVane to write into his order a provision giving the Board o. Control discretion to bar admission to Negores in the event riots or disorders were threatened.

Can Not Anticipate Trouble

But Judge DeVane said it would be "highly improper" for him to make such a provision in advance. He said he could not anticipate there would be any disorders, and that the Board of Control would have the right to seek such discretionary powers in the court in the event some trouble did develop.

The 74-year-old Judge DeVane said the courts had made it crystal clear that Negroes could not be barred from schools or universities because of color.

"I know and I think everybody knows that public education is confronted with the proposition that there can be no discrimination against the races," he said.

Hawkins now will have to make a new application for admission to the university and take a new admission examination. He said he would do so shortly.

Court Integration Order Looms for UF, FSU

TALLAHASSEE, June 17 (AP) — Federal Judge Dozier DeVane today promised to hand down this week a decision in the suit brought by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People seeking to end racial segregation at the University of Florida and Florida State University.

It appeared virtually certain at the end of trial of the suit today that DeVane's order will open the doors of the two universities to Negroes this fall.

The state, which has been fighting in the courts for nine years to head off integration, conceded it is a losing battle. It asked that a program of gradualism be followed with admission this fall restricted to the graduate level.

Judge DeVane displayed interest in the gradualism approach advanced by Assistant Atty. Gen. Ralph Odum. DeVane said yesterday the U. S. Supreme Court has made it crystal clear that Negroes can not be barred from public schools or universities because of color.

Attorneys for the NAACP told a reporter they have no objection to a gradualism approach. But they said they stoutly oppose a stipulation sought by Odum which would authorize the Board of Control to bar Negroes if disorders develop.

Would Try to Comply

Dr. Broward Culpepper, executive director of the Board of Control, which supervises the university system, testified that if an integration order is issued the board will make a good faith effort to comply.

He said the majority of Southern states which have integrated their universities have followed a program of gradualism. Answering a question of DeVane, he said he is "very firmly of the opinion" that restricting admissions at first to the graduate level would be the most orderly way of dealing with the problem.

Culpepper was placed on the stand after Odum failed in a conference in chambers to get the NAACP attorneys to accept the gradual approach tied to discretionary powers for the Board of Control to bar Negroes if trouble developed.

Judge DeVane said yesterday it would be "highly improper" for him to include such a provision in his order, since he couldn't anticipate that any disorders would result from admitting Negroes.

Odum put into the record over objections of the NAACP attorneys a public opinion survey report made by the Board of Control in May 1956 which concluded that great harm to the university system would result from immediate integration.

DeVane said he agrees with the NAACP attorneys that the report had doubtful legal value, but that he saw no harm in admitting it.

Culpepper said that since the U.S. Supreme Court's October 1955 decision implementing the desegregation decree the Board of Control has had no policy regarding admission of Negroes.

However, no Negroes have been admitted to either university. The University of Florida registrar testified that since 1945 a total of 85 Negroes had applied for admission to the Gainesville institution. No figures were announced on applications for admission to FSU at Tallahassee.

Dr. J. Wayne Reitz, University of Florida president, who was in the courtroom, said that if the integration order comes down the university will have no choice but to abide by it. The deadline for enrolling for the fall term is in August.

Federal Judge Opens the Doors As First Step in 'Gradualism'

TALLAHASSEE —(AP)— Federal Judge Dozier DeVane Wednesday opened the doors of University of Florida graduate schools to all qualified Negroes.

Judge DeVane handed down an order which said that the State Board of Control should be enjoined from enforcing any policy, custom or usage in the graduate schools that restricted admissions to white persons only.

Governor LeRoy Collins has taken a firm stand that Florida will obey the court's ruling and without the violence which occurred in Alabama when Autherine Lucy tried to enter a state institution of learning two years ago.

Dat 6-28-58

The Governor made it clear that the ruling has worked in 11 of the 16 Southern states and he can see no reason why a simliar move cannot and will not work in the Sunshine State.

EVEN THOUGH the judge's ruling applied only to the University of Florida at Gainesville, Governor Collins forecast that the Board of Control will remove racial barriers at Florida State University here now that the Federal court has ordered them removed at one of the state supported institutions of higher learning.

The Governor said in a formal statement:

- "I can see no reason why Florida cannot expect to obey the court's order without difficulty.
- "To suggest anything to the contrary is a reflection upon the goodwill, mature judgment and native pride of Florida citizens and the men and women who comprise the student bodies, the faculties and the alumni of our great universities."

Federal District Judge Dozier DeVan handed down the order opening the doors of Florida's graduate schools which has broken down the solid front of segregation in this state.

THE ORDER enjoins the State Board of Control from enforcing any policy, custom or use in the graduate schools that restricted admissions to white persons only.

Since summer schools have already gotten under way, the order will have its application this fall.

The order applied only to the University of Florida.

Decision Is Jolt To Bias

TALLAHASSEE — Florida's long and continued fight against integration in schools crumpled and fell in the wake of a momentous decision rendered by a Federal judge here last week.

The decision to integrate the University of Florida on the graduate level came on the heels of a surprise move by the attorneys for Virgil [illegible] Hawkins who has tried unsuccessfully to enter the U. of F. Law School for the past nine years.

The Door Is Cracked In Florida

With the District Court order of Federal Judge Dozier Devane last week opening the University of Florida graduate schools to qualified Negroes, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has won a nine-year legal battle to break down all racial barriers at the lily-white institution at Gainesville.

This means that next fall the university's schools of law, medicine, arts and sciences, engineering and agriculture will have to admit Negroes, thus being the first crack in the education door in Florida.

A precedent having been established, it seems certain that the Florida State University at Tallahassee will have to follow this course as soon as the NAACP files suit; and similar action is foreseen when suit against the jim-crow educational system of the city of Miami is taken.

Florida has been prominent among the Deep South states massively opposing the letter and spirit of the May 17, 1954 U.S. Supreme Court desegregation decision and thought it had erected impenetrable barriers to preserve tax-paid jim-crow public education.

It is difficult to see how such determined lily-white states as Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina can continue to legally prevent the entrance of Negro citizens to their tax-supported schools and colleges.

It takes time, money, skill and patience to initiate these suits and win these victories; and this latest one should stimulate Negroes to give greater financial support to the NAACP.

FEW IMPORTANT CHANGES SEEN

Integration Rule May Mean Death of FAMU Law School

TALLAHASSEE, June 21 (AP)—What changes are in prospect for the state universities now that a federal court order has opened University of Florida graduate schools to Negroes?

Not many important ones, at least at first. That's the opinion of state and university officials who have been studying the problem.

One move that is almost certain to be tried is to abolish the Florida A. & M. University law school which was set up in 1951 to head off efforts to integrate the Florida law school.

Some legislators are already talking of striking the appropriation for the A. & M. law school at the 1959 Legislature, if the Board of Control doesn't.

The law school costs the state $60,000 a year to operate. This year it had 21 students and graduated a record class of five students. The staff consists of a dean, seven instructors and a secretary.

Under the order handed down by Federal Judge Dozier DeVane on Wednesday, Negroes, if they can pass the admission test, may enter the University of Florida law school at Gainesville.

Has Graduate School

Florida A. & M. also operates a graduate school, but Dr. George Gore Jr., the president, said about 95 per cent of the approximately 200 students enrolled during the regular semester take teaching courses. He regards this an integral part of the teaching program. This summer about 1,200 graduate students are taking teaching work leading to a master's degree. The school offers no work toward a doctor's degree.

Dr. Gore said that in his opinion only a few A. & M. graduates would seek to transfer to Florida, or to Florida State University if that school is opened to graduate students later on.

The A. & M. president said the experience in Tennessee, North Carolina, Texas and other states where integration at the university level has taken place is that enrollment at the Negro colleges of those states hasn't been affected.

Florida A. & M.'s history dates back to 1887, and Dr. Gore said that traditions and family ties over the years had served to build up a strong school spirit at the Negro institution. This, he said, will continue to make it an attraction to the Negro race generally.

Sees No Major Changes

Dr. J. Broward Culpepper, executive director for the State Board of Control, is one who doesn't look for any major changes.

The board will meet next month to begin studying the problems involved.

"The board will evaluate the over-all situation in the light of what will be best to meet the needs of the people of Florida," he said.

While policy hasn't been set yet, Dr. Culpepper said it was his opinion that only those applications from Negroes for admission which are filed from here on out could be considered.

Eighty-five Negroes applied for admission to all levels of the University of Florida from 1945 to 1958. All were rejected.

The Board of Control is expected to give close attention to eliminating possible sources of racial friction such as in housing of students, use of swimming pools and dining facilities.

See Solution of Problems

Gov. LeRoy Collins and Dr. J. Wayne Reitz, president of the University of Florida, both expressed belief problems could be worked out without disruption or incident.

"I am convinced that regardless of personal opinions or emotions it is the desire of students and faculty that in carrying out the order of the court it be done with calmness and good taste," Dr. Reitz said.

One of the first questions to confront the Board of Control when it tackles the integration problem is whether the policy of admitting Negroes to the graduate schools shall be extended to Florida State University. Gov. Collins forecast that the FSU graduate schools will be integrated.

Assistant Atty. Gen. Ralph Odum, who has handled the State's nine-year legal fight to prevent integration, said the order was the best that could be expected since it was restricted to the graduate professional schools, and thereby would make for an easier transition.

Gov. Collins Sees "No Reason" Why Florida Cannot Obey Court On Decision In Graduate Schools

Feels Qualified Negroes Will Be Enrolled In Fall

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (UPI) — Federal District Judge Dozier Devane Wednesday ruled the State Board of Control can have no policy of racial segregation in the University of Florida graduate schools.

The decision came only one day after attorneys for Virgil Hawkins and attorneys for the state rested their cases in the nine year old battle to get Hawkins admitted into the all-white institution at Gainesville.

The order will not force Hawkins' enrollment in the law school. He will have to make another application and again take the law school entrance examination. A score of 340 is required for acceptance. Hawkins scored 200 on the test when he took it several years ago.

Florida Gov. Leroy Collins contacted later said he anticipates the state board of control will enroll qualified Negroes in graduate schools at Florida State University as well as the University of Florida, following a federal court ruling.

Collins added he could see no reason why Florida cannot expect to obey the court's order without difficulty. He declared:

"To suggest anything to the contrary is a reflection on the good will, mature judgment and native pride of Florida's citizens and the men and women who comprise the student bodies, the faculty and alumni of our great universities."

In the opinion, Judge Devane said he recognized the Board of Control had full statutory authority to regulate admissions and act in the case of any emergency to avoid public mischief "and to take such normal, reasonable and necessary steps as will provide for the orderly and peaceable administration of the university."

NOT LIMIT AUTHORITY

Devane said his opinion in no way limited the authority of the board and the officers of the university from "taking all necessary steps as will provide for the orderly and peaceable administration" of the institution.

He made it clear in the order that all applicants for the graduate schools of the university must be considered on their qualifications, without distinctions on the basis of race and color.

In limiting the injunction to the graduate school, Devane said only 'there is abundant precedent elsewhere for so restricting the order of this court."

During the trial this week, Hawkins, 50-year-old public relations man at Bethune-Cookman College, abandoned his personal fight to gain entrance to the law school and made the attack a class suit, to open the doors for all Negroes.

CONTENDS HAWKINS UNQUALIFIED

Ralph Odom, attorney for the Control Board, contended Hawkins was not qualified to enter the school because he made application for admittance three years before he received a degree from Bethune-Cookman.

The board maintained it has no policy of racial segregation in the universities. Director J. Broward Culpepper said after the Hawkins case was taken to court, the board refused to accept Negro students because it was unsure of its legal grounds.

School Registrar Richard S. Johnson testified 85 Negroes have asked to enroll in the school.

In his testimony Tuesday, Culpepper told the court that any integration should start at the top levels of the school and he assured the court the Board of Control would act "in good faith" to carry out any order issued.

Rule Climax Of Lengthy Legal Fight

Undergraduate Section Is Not Included in Action

TALLAHASSEE, June 18 (AP)—Doors of University of Florida graduate schools were opened to qualified Negroes today by a federal district court order that broke the solid front of segregation in this Southern state.

Federal Judge Dozier DeVane handed down an order enjoining the Board of Control from enforcing any policy, custom or usage in the graduate schools that restricted admissions to white persons only.

The decision opening Florida universities to Negro graduate students was the most difficult he has ever rendered, Judge Dozier DeVane said yesterday. The story is on page 22.

The order climaxed a nine-year legal fight by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People to break down racial barriers at the all-white institution.

Since summer schools already are in session, the order will have its first application this fall.

The order applied only to the University of Florida at Gainesville.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Ralph E. Odum said that a separate suit will have to be brought to open the doors of Florida State University, the state's other white university, to Negroes unless the Board of Control decides to do so on its own initiative.

State's Rightist

The 74-year-old Judge DeVane, who has been a staunch believer in the rights of the states, said in a memorandum opinion accompanying the order that he had no alternative but to issue the order in this class action in view of U.S. Supreme Court holdings on the subject.

Judge DeVane wrote into his memorandum opinion a provision requested by Odum, attorney for the Board of Control, which Odum said would give university officials a free hand to deal with emergencies if they should crop up.

This provision said:

"The court recognizes that defendants (university officials) have full and complete statutory authority to regulate admissions to the University of Florida and to act in emergencies to avoid public mischief and to take such normal, reasonable and necessary steps as will provide for the orderly and peaceable administration of said university."

Odum said this made it clear that university officials could act in good faith to take care of genuine emergencies without placing them in fear of being held in contempt of court.

He said he had asked for it to be inserted to prevent a repetition of the University of Alabama incident when an effort was made to cite President Oliver Carmichael for contempt of court for removing Negro Autherine Lucy from the campus to prevent injury to her.

No provision was made in Judge DeVane's order for extending integration to undergraduate classes.

Odum said Negroes would have to go into court again to request such an extension, or the Board of Control could extend it.

Francisco Rodriguez, one of the NAACP attorneys, said a gradual approach to integration would be acceptable since they realized any change such as this should come about slowly.

Reitz Comments

Dr. J. Wayne Reitz, president of the University of Florida, said, "I think the order speaks for itself. Any specific comment would involve policy which I would want to discuss with the Board of Control."

No one would hazard a guess as to how many Negroes would seek to enroll in university graduate schools this fall.

One Negro who said he would attempt to enroll in the university law school is Virgil Hawkins, 50, of Daytona Beach, who filed the original action in 1949 seeking entrance to the law school.

At the trial of the case here this week, agreement was reached to drop Hawkins' participation in the suit in favor of a class action. Hawkins now will have to file a new application for admission and take an admission test.

At the present time there is no integration anywhere in Florida. A case is pending in federal court at Miami which seeks to open the public schools to Negroes.

Board to Comply

Dr. J. Broward Culpepper, executive director of the Board of Control, said "The Board of Control in good faith will comply with the order."

Odum said the reference in the court's decision authorizing university officials to deal with emergencies should not be interpreted as authorizing a delay in the admission of qualified Negro applicants within the limitations of the court's order.

"I feel that the order which was entered today was the best which we could expect, since it is limited to the graduate professional schools and does not require the admission of Negro students at the undergraduate level," Odum said.

"I sincerely feel that we have exhausted every legal remedy available in resisting this suit during the past nine years. I can only hope now that reason and common sense will prevail on the part of all citizens both Negro and white, and that no actions will result on the part of any individual or group which will disrupt or injure the state universities or do further damage to race relations in this state."

U.S. Court Orders U. of F. Graduate School Integration

COLLINS VIEW

End of Segregation Forecast for FSU

TALLAHASSEE, June 18 (AP)—Gov. LeRoy Collins forecast tonight that the Board of Control will remove racial barriers at the Florida State University graduate schools now that a federal court has ordered them removed at the University of Florida graduate schools.

The governor told a news conference he doubted that the decision of federal district Judge Dozier DeVane opening graduate schools at the University of Florida would be appealed.

He said he didn't think an appeal would be advisable because "the relief sought in the case was much broader than that granted.

"If an appeal was taken to an appellate court, it might enter an order that would be more difficult to comply with."

The governor said in a formal statement:

Order Seen Obeyed

"I can see no reason why Florida cannot expect to obey the court's order without difficulty.

"To suggest anything to the contrary is a reflection upon the good will, mature judgment and native pride of Florida citizens and the men and women who comprise the student bodies, the faculties and the alumni of our great universities.

The governor said that desegregation at the graduate level already has been carried out in most Southern states without serious incident. He also noted that the Florida Supreme Court held in 1955 that there is no legal basis for racial segregation at the University of Florida Law School

The governor rejected a suggestion of Sen. Randolph Hodges of Cedar Key, a strong segregation supporter, that a special session of the Legislature be called in further attempts to maintain strict segregation at the University of Florida.

"I have no intention of calling a special session," Collins said.

"I can see no good whatever that would be accomplished by calling the Legislature into special session."

Hodges Expresses Fears

Hodges said he viewed the court order as "a foot in the door that will lead, and soon, to complete integration of our school system."

Hodges said segregationists in the Legislature had been conferring on the situation for some time.

"I believe we have enough votes to call ourselves into special session. I think we should do it, or we'll wake up some morning and find all our schools are integrated," he said.

Upon petition of three-fifths of the membership of each house, the secretary of state must call the Legislature into special session.

The governor commented that Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin had "exhausted every legal means to prevent the admission of Virgil Hawkins based upon his lack of qualifications regardless of race" and that the fight was successful because Hawkins withdrew as a party in the integration suit.

Ervin said in a statement that the federal judge's order "was a very realistic one in view of the fact that he had no alternative except to follow the decision by the Fifth Federal Circuit Court of Appeals and the U.S. Supreme Court."

Ervin commented that DeVane "recognized that the board (of Control) has authority on good faith non-racial grounds to regulate admissions and to act in emergencies to avoid public mischief.

"We sincerely hope and believe that there will be no public mischief," he added.

Racial Probe Unit Silent on Studies

TALLAHASSEE, Oct. 28 (UPI)—The legislative committee investigating the racial picture in Florida refused today to say what its chief investigator is doing in Gainesville, site of the University of Florida.

Investigator R. J. Strickland has spent 29 days of the last 60 in Gainesville, according to expense accounts filed with the state comptroller.

Chairman Charley Johns of Starke, only authorized spokesman for the committee, would not say what matter Strickland is studying.

However, earlier this year, a member said the committee had information that professors are agitating for race-mixing. Sen. Bart Knight of Blountstown said the group was looking into this matter.

It cannot be ascertained from expense statements whether Strickland is also studying the situation at Florida State and A&M Universities in Tallahassee. Tallahassee is his home base and he draws no travel money for work done here.

He spent 10 days in Gainesville late in August, seven days in September and 12 days so far this month. He also has visited nearly every other major Florida city but only once or twice in the period.

He bought 3,000 feet of tape for his recorder on Oct. 1, apparently to gather testimony for the committee. He paid $165 for "confidential information" in the last two months.

Johns said the committee will not meet again until the court has disposed of a suit by which Miami NAACP officials are challenging the committee's right to require them to testify and open membership records.

This suit has delayed the group's investigation to determine the extent of Communist infiltration of the NAACP. A side investigation into activities of the Ku Klux Klan was halted when witnesses refused to testify and contempt proceedings are pending against them in Leon Circuit Court.

Hearing Set On Negro's Bid To Enter Florida University

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — State officials opposing Negro Virgil Hawkins' federal court action for immediate admission to the University of Florida received word today that April 7 had been set for oral arguments before the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Hawkins has appealed a refusal by Federal District Judge Dozier Devane to issue a temporary order that he cannot be barred from the all-white university because of his race. Devane held up on the temporary injunction until he has heard arguments from both sides. After the appeal, he halted proceedings until the New Orleans court acts.

Assistant Atty. Gen. Ralph Odum, in answering Hawkins' appeal to the New Orleans court, said Hawkins himself was delaying the case in Devane's court by taking the appeal.

Odum asked the appellate court to dismiss the appeal because a temporary injunction would deny the state the right to enter any defenses against Hawkins' move.

He said the state has "valid and sufficient legal defenses which should be considered by the trial court before determining the case, and these defenses are not related solely to the question of race."

U.S. Court Bid Made By Negro

TALLAHASSEE, Jan. 14 (AP)—Virgil D. Hawkins, 49-year-old Daytona Beach Negro, went into federal district court today in a new move to gain entrance to the University of Florida law school.

The suit, filed by his attorney, Francisco A. Rodriguez of Tampa, asked the court to enjoin the Board of Control from refusing to admit Hawkins to the law school "solely on account of his race and color."

The suit also asked the court to enter a judgment declaring that the Board of Control "may not continue to pursue the policy, custom and usage of operating and maintaining the University of Florida with its several schools and colleges as a publicly supported institution for white persons in the State of Florida only."

Rodriguez said he would ask Federal Judge Dozier DeVane to set a hearing as soon as possible. He said Hawkins was attempting to get an early decision so he could be admitted at the beginning of the new semester in February.

Hearing Set Jan. 28

A hearing on the petition was set later for 10 a.m. Jan. 28 in Tallahassee. The suit was filed here because Board of Control offices are located in this city.

Judge DeVane, 74, has announced his intention to retire at the end of this month. After that he has the discretion of handling whatever cases he chooses in his capacity as a retired judge.

The U.S. Supreme Court in refusing to order prompt admission of Hawkins to the law school several weeks ago suggested that he file suit in his local federal district court in line with the U.S. Supreme Court's school desegregation decision of 1954.

The complaint said that this is a class action brought by Hawkins on behalf of himself and other Negroes who are qualified to attend the University of Florida. The suit said Hawkins met all requirements for admission to the law school except the requirement that he be a white person.

In October, the U.S. Supreme Court refused to order Hawkins' immediate admission to the Florida law school. Its decision was handed down in a case which originated in state courts.

The Florida Supreme Court earlier had refused to order his admission until he was prepared "to present testimony showing his admission can be accomplished without doing great public mischief."

This is the first time Hawkins had taken into federal district court his nine-year legal fight to be admitted to the law school.

Virgil Hawkins Case

Virgil Hawkins, who has been seeking admission to the School of Law of the University of Florida since 1949, appealed to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, in New Orleans, La., on February 28, from the refusal of U. S. District Judge Dozier DeVane of Tallahassee, Fla. to issue a preliminary injunction in Hawkins' latest court action so that he could be permitted to the school without further delay.

Mr. Hawkins filed his suit in the federal district court in Tallahassee, Fla., January 14, 1958, at the suggestion of the U. S. Supreme Court after the Florida Supreme Court refused for the third time to issue an order for his prompt admission despite the fact that the high court had ruled him entitled to prompt admission on several prior appeals.

When Hawkins filed his notice of appeal with the District Court, the Attorney General of Florida, Richard Ervin, asked the court for an order staying, in effest, all further procedings in the case until the Court of Appeals acted upon his appeal. The district court granted the order. As a result, Hawkins is now prohibited from pressing his case to a final decision which would enable him to be admitted to the September, 1958 term.

In view of this action Mr. Hawkins' attorneys have also petitioned the Court of Appeals to issue a writ of mandamus directing Judge Dozier DeVane to proceed with the case pending the appeal.

Attorneys for Hawkins are Francisco A. Rodriguez of Tampa, Fla., Thurgood Marshall and Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, both of New York.

The filing of these three court matters brings to six the number of legal actions taken in the month of February by the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund attorneys in behalf of persons whose constitutional rights are being violated. In addition to the three matters referred to above, memorandum briefs were filed in the Nashville, Tenn. school case on February 3 and in the Memphis, Tenn. bus case on February 11. The U.S. Supreme Court was petitioned on February 12 to review the conviction of one white and two Negro college youths for violating the Tallahassee, Fla. bus segregation law.

In addition, favorable and important decisions were rendered in seven cases during the month of February. They are: (1) the Arlington County, Va. school case, (2-4) the three cases attacking Louisiana's new law requiring certificates of good moral character from the high school principal of any Negro seeking admission to a white college in the state in the face of another statute which makes it grounds for discharge for a principal to do anything to bring about integration in Louisiana, (5) the New Orleans, La. school case, (6) the New Orleans public golf course case, and (7) the New Orleans bus segregation case.

In each of these cases, federal appellate courts affirmed lower court rulings in favor of Negro plaintiffs.

Court Lifts Racial Bars At Florida University

Opening Graduate Schools Breaks State's Solid Front

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP)—University of Florida graduate schools were opened to qualified Negroes Wednesday by a United States district court order that broke the solid front of segregation in this Southern state.

Judge Dozier Devane enjoined the Board of Control from enforcing any policy, custom or usage in the graduate schools that restricted admissions to white persons only.

The order climaxed a nine-year legal fight by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People to break down racial barriers of Florida at Gainesville. Asst. Atty. Gen. Ralph E. Odum said a separate suit will have to be brought to open the doors of Florida State University, the state's other white university, to Negroes unless the Board of Control decides to do so.

NO ALTERNATIVE

The 74-year-old Devane said in a memorandum opinion that he had no alternative but to issue the order in view of U.S. Supreme Court holdings on the subject.

At present, there is no integration anywhere in Florida. A case is pending in federal court at Miami which seeks to open the public schools to Negroes.

Devane's order will apply specifically to the College of Law and the School of Medicine, the only four-year degree schools at the University. It also will apply to the graduate programs in the Arts and Sciences School, the Engineering School and College of Agriculture.

Since summer schools already are in session, the order will have its first application this fall.

BOARD DISCRETION

Devane wrote into his memorandum opinion a provision requested by Odum which the attorney said would give University officials a free hand to deal with emergencies if they should crop up.

"The court recognizes that defendants (University officials) have full and complete statutory authority to regulate admissions to the University of Florida and to act in emergencies to avoid public mischief and to take such normal, reasonable and necessary steps as will provide for the orderly and peaceable administration of said university."

Odum said this made it clear that University officials could act in good faith to take care of genuine emergencies without placing them in fear of being held in contempt of court.

He said he had asked for it to be inserted to prevent a repetition of the University of Alabama incident when an effort was made to cite President Oliver Carmichael for contempt of court for removing Negro Autherine Lucy from the campus to prevent injury to her.

No provision was made in Devane's order for extending integration to undergraduate classes.

Odum said Negroes would have to go into court again to request such an extension, or the Board of Control could extend it.

Francisco Rodriguez, one of the NAACP attorneys, said a gradual approach to integration would be acceptable snce they realized any change such as this should come about slowly.

No one would hazard a guess as to how many Negroes would seek to enroll in University graduate schools this fall.

HAWKINS CASE DROPPED

One Negro who said he would attempt to enroll in the University Law School is Virgil Hawkins, 50, of Daytona Beach, who filed the original action in 1949 seeking entrance to the law school.

At the trial of the case here this week, agreement was reached to drop Hawkins' participation in the suit in favor of a class action. Hawkins now will have to file a new application for admission and take an admission test.

Would Go In Wheel Chair

Fla. Law School Head Says Hawkins Is Not Qualified

TALLAHASSEE. — (UPI) — Virgil Hawkins is not morally or scholastically qualified to attend the University of Florida law school, President J. Wayne Reitz told federal district court here Wednesday.

Hawkins' record of "financial dereliction and misconduct" dating back to 1941 makes him an unfit student, Reitz said in a brief filed by the state with Federal Judge Dozier A. Devane.

Reitz said this would be true whether Hawkins were white or colored.

Devane has set June 6 for a hearing on Hawkins' suit demanding admission to the law school next September, filed after he fought unsuccessfully through the state courts for nine years.

PROOF DEMANDED

Hawkins, 49, who said he intends to enroll in the law school if he gets so old he has to go in a wheel chair, demanded proof of the state's contention that he is not being kept out only because he is a Negro.

Reitz based his statements on affidavits charging that Hawkins beat two Negro children while he was teaching at Yalaha school in Lake County in 1941, passed a bad check on a bank in which he had no account and ran out on two other debts.

The federal government filed a $272 lien against Hawkins last February for taxes he allegedly failed to pay on his 1956 income.

NO COLOR BARRIER

The Florida Supreme Court ruled a year ago that Hawkins cannot be barred solely because of color, but it ordered his enrollment delayed until it could be done without public turmoil.

Reitz said Hawkins is ruled out scholastically by a score of 200 on the law school admission test several years ago. There was no score requirements then but Reitz said students making less than 340 have little chance of passing the course.

In response to other questions from Hawkins, the state's brief today disclosed that 85 Negroes have applied for admission to the university at Gainesville since August 1945. All were turned down.

Federal Court Orders Florida University to Admit Negroes

NEW YORK.—Thurgood Marshall, director-counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, today hailed the order of U. S. District Judge Dozier Devane, which opened the University of Florida graduate and professional schools to Negroes, as a major victory in the drive to desegregate public educational facilities in the South. The federal judge's order ended a 9-year court fight in the case of Virgil Hawkins, a Daytona Beach Negro, who has sought admission to the University School of Law.

Hawkins originally filed his case in the Supreme Court of Florida in 1949. The Florida Supreme Court first refused to order the admission of Negroes to the University on the ground that a separate law school had been provided for Hawkins at Florida A&M. When the U. S. Supreme Court was petitioned by Hawkins' attorneys to review this decision, the high court returned the case to the Florida court for reconsideration in the light of its May 17, 1954 decision in the School Segregation Cases. The Florida Supreme Court then appointed a commissioner to determine when Hawkins could be admitted without "public mischief."

Hawkins again sought review by the U. S. Supreme Court. This time the court vacated its previous order and ruled that since Hawkins sought admission on the graduate and professional school level he was entitled to immediate admission. However, the Supreme Court of Florida again refused to admit Hawkins on the ground that to do so would cause "public mischief." A third attempt by Hawkins' attorneys to have the U. S. Supreme Court review the case was denied "without prejudice" to the right of Hawkins to bring his case in the Federal District Court.

In January 1958, Hawkins' attorneys filed suit in the Federal District Court in Tallahassee on behalf of Hawkins and all other Negro citizens of Florida who are eligible to attend the University of Florida. The attorneys moved for a preliminary injunction in order that Hawkins might be admitted to the February 1958 term.

Federal Judge Devane at that time denied a hearing on the motion on the ground that he would not enter any order until he could have a full hearing. He was reversed by the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. The case finally came to trial on June 16, and Judge Devane entered his order on June 18 which ordered the University of Florida to open its doors to Negro students.

There has been no integration in the universities in the states of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia and South Carolina. Florida is also one of the seven southern states in which there has been no desegregation on the elementary school level. The other states are Georgia, South Carolina, Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama and Virginia. A suit is presently pending in the Federal District Court in Miami which seeks to end segregation in the public schools of Dade County, Fla.

Thurgood Marshall, one of Hawkins' attorneys, today called upon qualified Negro citizens of Florida to take advantage of the new educational opportunities opened to them at the University of Florida and Florida State University as a result of Judge Devane's order. Mr. Marshall said that it should not be necessary to bring a new lawsuit to open the graduate and professional schools of Florida State University at Tallahassee. He said that good faith on the part of the Board of Control of Florida should obviously make such a suit unnecessary.

Attorneys in the case, in addition to Thursgood Marshall, were Constance Baker Motley and Robert L. Carter of New York; Francisco Rodriguez of Tampa, Fla.

Present Judge Retiring Soon, Paving Way for Another 'Judge Davies'

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 11 (AP)—The Virgil Hawkins case, being readied for a new round in Federal District Court here, is assuming some of the elements of the Little Rock segregation incident—but with one important difference.

The similarity is in the fact that the presiding judge for this north Florida district, Florida-born, 74-year-old Dozier Devane, is retiring Jan. 31 at a time when there are prospects the Hawkins case will be pending.

Hawkins, a Daytona Beach Negro, has been trying for nine years to gain admission to the all-white University of Florida Law School.

IN LITTLE ROCK, the presiding judge for the eastern district of Arkansas, Arkansas-born Thomas C. Trimble, had retired and the presiding judge of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals had assigned a Fargo, N.D., district judge, Ronald N. Davies, to sit in the case of the nine Negroes seeking admission to Central High School.

In one of the legal highlights of the Little Rock case, Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus sought unsuccessfully to disqualify Judge Davies on grounds of prejudice. And Little Rock segregation groups protested Davies presiding in the case because of his Northern background.

JUDGE DEVANE announced his retirement Dec. 16, but President Eisenhower has not yet sent the nomination of his successor to the Senate. However, Judge Devane said Saturday he planned to continue functioning as a retired judge after Feb. 1 until his successor is named and qualified.

In his capacity as a retired judge, Devane will have the discretion to handle whatever cases he chooses, although he could not be compelled to handle all of the work of the district as is the case of an active judge.

Should a new judge not be named and Devane decides against accepting the Hawkins case, then it would be up to the chief judge of the southern Florida district, William J. Barker, to send someone to sit in the case, or the presiding judge of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, Joseph C. Hutcheson Jr., of Houston, Tex., would send in a judge from the Fifth Circuit.

The basic difference in the Fifth Circuit, in which Florida is located, and the Eighth District in which Little Rock is located, is that the Fifth District is entirely in the South—Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas. The Eighth District takes in Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska, the Dakotas—and Arkansas.

AT TAMPA THIS week Hawkins' attorney, Francisco Rodriguez, announced he would seek immediate federal court action in an effort to get Hawkins admitted to the University of Florida.

Rodriguez, general counsel for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said "we will try to get a bill of complaint so the Supreme Court will hear it." He said he would shoot for an order to get Hawkins admitted at mid-term.

LAST OCT. 14, the U.S. Supreme Court refused to order Hawkins' immediate admission to the Florida law school in a case which originated in state courts. But the Supreme Court pointed out that Hawkins could seek the same relief in an appropriate federal district court. This was in line with the high court's holding that implementation of its school desegregation decisions should be left to local U.S. courts.

Hawkins had appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court then from a refusal by the Florida Supreme Court to order his admission until he was prepared "to present testimony showing his admission can be accomplished without doing great public mischief."

* * *

WHEN HAWKINS files his new petition here it will be the first time he has gone into federal district court. The hearing in the new case likely will be held in Tallahassee since offices of the state board of control are here.

U.S. ATTY. Harold Carswell of Tallahassee, a 37-year-old native of Georgia, is reported to have the inside track for the appointment to succeed Devane.

A recommendation on the successor is expected to be transmitted by state Republican leaders to Atty. Gen. William Rogers in a few days. Key figures in drawing up the recommendation are state Republican chairman G. Harold Alexander, Republican committeeman Anthony Y. Battaglia of Maderia Beach and Republican committeewoman Clare Williams of St. Petersburg.

Negro Renews Law School Fight

Courier-Journal
Montgomeryville

TAMPA, Fla., Jan. 27 (AP)—The attorney for Virgil Hawkins said today he will seek immediate federal court action to gain admission of the Daytona Beach Negro to the University of Florida Law School.

Francisco Rodriguez, Florida general counsel for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said all that remains to be done on the federal court petition is to get Hawkins' signature on the court papers.

Rodriguez said "we will try to get a bill of compalint so the Supreme Court will hear it."

He said he would be associated in the case with Robert L. Carter, NAACP attorney of New York, and Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, also of New York.

Judge Bars Negro Swift School Entry

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan 28 (AP)—Federal District Judge Dozier Devane refused today to enter a temporary order which would permit Negro Virgil Hawkins to enter the all-white University of Florida Law School at the start of the February semester.

Devane announced at the conclusion of the hearing that he was unwilling to issue any type of injunction in the case except upon final hearing. He said a date for a final hearing should be set as soon as possible.

Devane refused to allow Hawkins' attorney, Constance Baker Motley, of New York City, to put on witnesses she had brought, saying he did not think testimony was necessary at this time.

Mrs. Motley, an attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, appeared surprised at the ruling which came before attorneys for the State Board of Control had uttered a word.

Mrs. Motley said that under an Oct. 14, 1957, ruling of the United States Supreme Court in a case involving Hawkins which came up through the state courts, the Supreme Court had determined that Hawkins was entitled to admission to the law school by a Federal District Court order.

Devane said, "I do not consider any decision of the U. S. Supreme Court takes from the right to control procedural activities in my court and this complaint does not set forth any facts upon which I could grant a temporary order."

Florida Court Again Thwarts V. D. Hawkins

World Telegram Aft. Jan. 28

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—U. S. District Judge Dozier A. DeVane this week refused to issue a temporary injunction enjoining the University of Florida from refusing to admit Virgil D. Hawkins to the University Law School in time for the start of the February 1958 term. The case has been before the Florida courts 8 years. Three times it has been before the U. S. Supreme Court. The U. S. Supreme Court, upon the third appeal, suggested that Hawkins take his case to the U. S. District Court.

Discrimination

The motion turned down by Judge DeVane on Tuesday, January 28, sought to restrain the University from excluding Mr. Hawkins pending final disposition of the action. It asked that Mr. Hawkins be admitted by February 4.

Judge DeVane said he would not issue the order without a final hearing and refused to permit Mr. Hawkins' attorneys to present witnesses. He said such testimony was not necessary at this time.

APPLIED IN 1949

Mr. Hawkins first applied for admission to the University of Florida Law School on May 13, 1949. Four other Negro students applied at the same time for admission to other schools and colleges of the University. They were all turned away because they were Negroes.

The U. S. Supreme Court on two occasions ruled that Mr. Hawkins was entitled to immediate admission. Each time the Florida state court failed to order the University, to admit him to the Law School. Finally, on October 14, 1957, the Supreme Court refused to review the third refusal of the state court to order the University to admit Mr. Hawkins and sent him to the federal court.

Refusal to admit Hawkins to the law School during the past 8 years has resulted in irreparable injury to him," NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund lawyers for Hawkins argued. "The irreparable injury continues and shall continue until enjoined by this court," the lawyers pleaded.

No date for the final hearing has been set.

NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys for Hawkins are Thurgood Marshall and Constance Baker Motley of New York, and Francisco A. Rodriguez of Tampa, Fla.

One Judge Still Leads To Another

NEW YORK — "We are considering appellate action of Judge Devane's refusal to enter a preliminary injunction allowing Virgil Hawkins to enter the University of Florida Law School.

"A decision on the move should come in another week or two," declared Mrs. Constance B. Motley, attorney for Mr. Hawkins, in his nine year-old fight to gain entrance to the all white school.

Mrs. Motley was commenting Saturday on U.S. District Judge Dozier Devane's refusal to grant a temporary order allowing Mr. Hawkins to enter the law school.

"WE TRIED TO GET him to issue a preliminary injunction so that Mr. Hawkins might enter school in February at the start of the semester.

"As it stands now, it means we'll have to wait until the final hearing in the case if appellate action of Judge Devane's directive is not taken."

In refusing to issue the injunction for Mr. Hawkins' admission to the school, Judge Devane said he was unwilling to grant any type injunction pending a final hearing.

The case was reviewed three times by the U.S. Supreme Court, which since has found Mr. Hawkins entitled to be admitted to the school through a Federal court order.

The State Board of Control, the agency which controls the University of Florida, argued that Mr. Hawkins' admission to the school would cause riots, Mrs. Motley declared.

She added that the board had come up with no new defense, despite a Supreme Court determination that the riot argument, in effect, was not substantial to deny admittance.

During the hearing, Judge Devane refused to allow Mrs. Motley to examine witnesses she had brought.

* * *

REMINDED OF the Supreme Court action in the case, Judge Devane responded:

"I do not consider any decision of the U.S. Supreme Court takes from me the right to control procedural activities in my court and this complaint does not set forth any facts upon which I could grant a temporary order."

Mrs. Motley is an NAACP attorney. No final hearing date in the case was set, but trial would be set "as soon as possible."

REFUTES TRIBUNAL CONTROL

U.S. Judge Denies Negro UF Entry

TALLAHASSEE, Jan. 28 (AP) — Federal District Judge Dozier DeVane declared today the U.S. Supreme Court couldn't control his procedural activities and refused to issue a temporary order to admit a Negro to the University of Florida law school.

Virgil Hawkins, 49-year-old Daytona Beach Negro who has been trying for nine years to get into the Gainesville school, thus lost the first round of a new legal battle through the federal district court.

Judge DeVane announced at the conclusion of a 15-minute hearing that he was unwilling to issue any kind of an injunction except upon a final hearing.

A date for a final hearing will be set after attorneys for the Board of Control file an answer in the case. Under court rules, the board has until Feb. 9 to respond to the suit.

Hawkins' attorney, Constance Baker Motley of New York City, told the court that the U. S. Supreme Court already had decreed upon the basis of a University of Texas case in 1950 that Negroes were entitled to attend state universities.

Cites Federal Ruling

And she said the U. S. Supreme Court had implied in an Oct. 14, 1957, ruling in a suit by Hawkins which came up through the state courts that he was entitled to prompt admission by a federal district court order.

Judge DeVane remarked, "I do not consider any decision of the U. S. Supreme Court takes from me the right to control procedural activities in my court and this complaint does not set forth any facts upon which I could grant a temporary order."

Hawkins' counsel, a Negro attorney for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said it was necessary to obtain a temporary injunction to permit Hawkins to enter the law school at mid-term in February.

However, Judge DeVane said Hawkins had been pursuing his flight to get into the law school for nine years and he did not think he would suffer irreparable injury if he had to wait for a final hearing.

Opposition Prepared

Assistant State Atty. Gen. Ralph Odom was in the courtroom prepared to oppose Hawkins' petition for the Board of Control, but Judge DeVane's ruling came before he had an opportunity to make a presentation.

Odom had said previously that he would oppose the temporary petition on the ground that the Board of Control has law and facts which should be considered before the court acts. He said granting of a temporary injunction would bring an immediate breakdown in racial segregation.

While the case was filed for Hawkins, it was made a class action which if successful would open the university to Negroes.

Hawkins said outside the courtroom that he had not given up on getting in the law school at the new semester starting Feb. 10, but that if he didn't make it at that time, he felt confident he would get in at the September term.

If admitted, he said he planned to live with relatives in Gainesville and would not reside on the campus. Hawkins is a member of the staff at Bethune-Cookman College in Daytona Beach.

NAACP Acts To Push Hawkins School Case

NEW YORK — Three legal actions involving the constitutional rights of Negroes were taken this week by attorneys for the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc.

One was in the Little Rock high school case and two were continuing efforts to gain the admission of Virgil Hawkins to the University of Florida Law School.

In the Little Rock case a brief was filed recently with the U. S. Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit in St. Louis by NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund attorneys. They urged the court to affirm a judgment of a district court which prohibited interference with the Little Rock's court approved plan to integrate its high schools.

On August 29, 1957, a state court order was obtained by a Mrs. Clyde Thomason, a white parent and taxpayer, which restrained the school board from proceeding with its plan to integrate and, in effect, overrode the judgments and decrees of federal courts approving the plan.

LITTLE ROCK

On the same day the Little Rock school board petitioned the U. S. District Court to enjoin Mrs. Thomason from using the state court order. This injunction was granted and the Little Rock High school proceeded to desegregate.

Attorneys for the Negro students are Wiley A. Branton of Pine Bluff, Ark., and Thurgood Marshall, director-counsel of the N. A. A. C. P. Legal Defense and Educational Fund staff in New York.

Virgil Hawkins, who has been seeking admission to the School of Law of the University of Florida since 1949, appealed to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in New Orleans, La., on Feb. 28, from the refusal of U. S. District Judge Dozier DeVane of Tallahassee, Fla., to issue a preliminary injunction in Hawkins' latest court action so that he could be admitted to the school without further delay.

Hawkins filed his suit in the federal district court in Tallahassee, Fla., Jan. 14, 1958, at the suggestion of the U. S. Supreme court after the Florida Supreme court refused for the third time to issue an order for his prompt admission despite the fact that the high Court had ruled him entitled to prompt admission on several prior appeals.

When Hawkins filed his notice of appeal with the District Court, the Attorney General of Florida, Richard Ervin, asked the court for an order staying, in effect, all further proceedings in the case until the Court of Appeals acted upon his appeal. The district court granted the order. As a result, Hawkins is now prohibited from pressing his case to a final decision which would enable him to be admitted to the September 1958 term.

SEEK WRIT

In view of this action Hawkins' attorneys have also petitioned the Court of Appeals to issue a writ of mandamus directing Judge Dozier DeVane to proceed with the case pending the appeal.

Attorneys for Hawkins are Francisco A. Redrignez, of Tampa, Fla., Thurgood Marshall and Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, both of New York.

6 OTHER ACTIONS

The filing of these three, court matters brings to six the number of legal actions taken in the month of February by the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund attorneys in behalf of persons whose constitutional rights are being violated.

In addition to the three matters referred to above, memorandum briefs were filed in the Nashville, Tenn., school case on Feb. 3, and in the Memphis, Tenn., bus case on Feb. 11. The U. S. Supreme Court was petitioned on Feb. 12 to review the conviction of one white and two Negro college youths for violating the Tallahassee, Fla. bus segregation law.

In addition, favorable and important decisions were rendered in seven cases during the month of February. They are:

(1) the Arlington county, Va., school case, (2-4) the three cases attacking Louisiana's law requiring certificates of good moral character from the high school principal of any Negro seeking admission to a white college in the state in the face of another statute which makes it grounds for disbarge for a principal to do anything to bring about integration in Louisiana, (5) the New Orleans, La., school case, (6) the New Orleans public golf course case, and (7) the New Orleans bus segregation case.

In each of these cases, federal appellate courts affirmed lower court rulings in favor of Negro plaintiffs.

New Integration View Study Set

TALLAHASSEE, May 1 (UH)—The governor's Racial Advisory Commission met here today and agreed to undertake a new study to determine the attitude of the public toward racial integration at the University of Florida Law College.

The study was requested by the State Board of Control as a guide in determining if Negroes could be admitted to the law school at Gainesville without violence or turmoil or harm to the university system.

Former Circuit Judge L. L. Fabisinski of Pensacola, chairman of the commission, said the group did not decide definitely how it will make the survey or "inquiry" as he called it.

But he said present thinking is to have it made by a person or group in the surveying business rather than the commission members themselves.

The mechanics will not be worked out until after our next meeting," he said and no date has been set to get it started. The last such study was made in 1956 under the supervision of Florida State University Prof. Lewis Killian with help from the attorney general and Board of Control staff.

It found after polling students, parents, faculty and alumni of the state universities and white and Negro high schools and other groups that integration at that time would lead to violence and disrupt the whole college system.

On the basis of this study, and other factors, the State Supreme Court ruled that although Daytona Beach Negro Virgil Hawkins cannot be barred from the law college solely because of color, his enrollment at that time would lead to public mischief.

The court ordered his admission delayed until the situation changed. The U. S. Supreme Court refused to review that decision.

Hawkins has since taken his nine-year fight into federal court here and a hearing is set for June 16.

The Board of Control has asked federal court to halt the proceeding on the grounds the State Supreme Court still has jurisdiction of the case.

It also pleaded for time to have the new survey made to determine whether conditions have changed since the 1956 integration study.

First Negro At UF

Orlando Vet In Law School

By BERT COLLIER
Herald Staff Writer

GAINESVILLE — With a total lack of fanfare, George Henry Starke Jr., 27-year-old Air Force veteran from Orlando, Monday became the first Negro student to enroll in a previously segrated state school.

He was accepted as a graduate student in the University of Florida law school and will prepare himself for a career at the bar, specializing in corporate law.

Starke went almost unnoticed as he entered the auditorium at the law building and sat quietly in the front row during registration preliminaries.

Numerous plain clothes and campus police mingled with the students, but had nothing to do.

Later, University officials said the historic integration under a federal court order went on in "a completely normal manner" and Starke added that his first day at the university was "a wonderful experience."

"Naturally I was under some pressure and was a little tense," said Starke. He described his first relationships with fellow students as "very good."

Starke will live in a private home off the campus and will attend classes for the next three years.

The young Negro, whose father, Dr. George Henry Starke, is a general practitioner in Sanford, said he made the decision personally to register at the University of Florida.

"I was a student member of the NAACP," he said, "but they have nothing to do with my being here. Neither has any other group."

Starke said he decided on a law career after leaving the Air Force in 1957 and filed applications with schools outside the South. Several favorable replies were received. "But when I heard the University of Florida would admit qualified Negro students, I decided to apply in my home state. Although the deadline was passed, they gave me consideration."

Starke took his entrance examinations at the University of South Carolina and his grade was "comfortably above" the minimum required by the State Board of Control.

"My big reason for wanting to attend the University of Florida was economic," said Starke, who is getting assistance under the GI bill.

"But another important point is that I expect to practice law in Florida. I will be learning about Florida law as I go along, and the contacts I make here, with fellow students and others, will become increasingly important in the years to come."

Starke said he had no idea when he applied that he would be the only Negro student among some 125 freshman law students.

"But it began to be apparent in the last few days," he said. "The university announced only one Negro had qualified and I knew I was the one."

The university was ordered to admit qualified Negroes on a graduate level following a nine-year legal battle by Virgil Hawkins, Daytona Beach Negro, who sought admittance to the law school.

But Hawkins failed to pass entrance requirements, getting low marks on previous law school entrance tests, and was not allowed to attend.

While Starke selected a seat in the extreme corner of the large auditorium, several students engaged him in conversation as he stood in line to file his registration card.

Several fellow classmen said he would be accepted completely as a student.

"We are all proud of the way this was handled," said Emmett Anderson Jr., Fort Myers junior. "The situation was explained carefully to us in advance and we are all ready to accept it."

Tom Biggs, of Georgetown, president of the university student body, said the possibility that Negro students would be accepted this fall has been a topic of general discussion all summer.

Students and faculty members took part in the planning. Biggs was one of six student leaders who met with six professors in a discussion group.

"We are sure that this will proceed in a perfectly normal manner," said Biggs. "The students are mature and will react to this as to any other normal situation."

Bob Park, Sanford, member of the executive committee of the student bar association, said:

"We are all interested in seeing that this goes well."

UNIVERSITY SYSTEM OF GEORGIA
DISCRIMINATION

Posters For The State's Educational Records

Daily World 2-4

The Board of Regents of the University System of Georgia met last Wednesday and set some 10 standards by which those in authority would be guided in the future in approving applications for entrance in the system. While no reference to race is included in the "standards," the measure is obviously devised to answer the complaints of Negroes seeking or who in the future might seek, admission to the University.

Ga. 3-14-58

To spell these standards out, an applicant for admission must obtain a certificate from two alumni of the unit he seeks to enter. This instrument of course must bear out certain facts as to the moral character, fitness and reputation, either of which would afford one with ample area of defeating the candidate for admission. 14e(1) Discrimination

In addition, the applicant must secure from the ordinary or clerk of the court of his county, certificate to the effect that he or she is a bonafide resident of the county, of good reputation and the ability to pay, etc.

A stranger in these parts, not knowing what it is all about might grasp the idea that those who represent the educational interests of the state hold education out as a sort of taboo; something to be highly discredited and prohibited if possible, from the high fences one must climb to qualify.

While the whole thing is of questionable constitutionality it does not bode good for the state; it says in so many terms that there is obviously an unwillingness on the part of those representing the state's educational interest to make available for all citizens alike a common facility paid for by the taxes of all the people.

Again, like the many subterfuges to make voting prohibitive among Negro groups, these regulations in time will also cut both ways, like a two-edged sword, will retard both groups; they will have bearing as a common deterrent in our educational endeavor and in the end place our whole educational processes in jeopardy.

A few years ago when it was decided to set up all kinds of barriers to Negro voting, it was not long before a decided letup was noted in white voting. Voting is a two-way game, interesting only when both sides are playing. Such begets interest and competitive enthusiasm.

With nothing whatever to spur the voters on, the one-party, county-unit and white primary ventures finally brought the state to the brinks of political inertia. A minority vote brought down a minority interest and it wasn't long before real elections in Georgia were mere tokens, with fewer people turning out to vote than in many counties in this country.

With all sorts of prohibitions placed around education for some, the many will succumb by the wayside. Our educational urge and interest will lessen and we will inadvertably gain a place which will not do justice to a section in the open market of other states for doctors, dentists and other essential professional men and women, with the doors of its own institutions heavily barred against those citizens whose taxes are used rather, to keep them barred.

New College Rules Bolster Segregation

14e(1) Discrimination

By WILLIAM M. BATES

The Georgia Board of Regents Wednesday adopted additional entrance requirements for the University System that seem designed to strengthen the state's defense against integration suits.

It approved a list of 10 standards to guide alumni, ordinaries and Superior Court clerks in certifying prospective students for admission to units of the University System.

Certified Ga. 3-13-58

The certification procedure for admission to the University System is now under attack in Federal District court here by four Negroes seeking to enter Georgia State College of Business Administration.

Atlanta, Ga.

The new standards appear designed in part to answer objections raised by Negroes to the present system. There was no discussion of the standards.

In order to be admitted to the University System, a prospective student must obtain certificates from two alumni of the unit he seeks to enter testifying to the moral character, reputation and fitness of the applicant.

In addition, the applicant must also obtain a certificate from his county ordinary or Superior Court clerk that he is a bona fide resident of the county and is of good moral character and reputation.

The Negroes seeking a federal court order to force Georgia State to admit them charge the certification requirements are "unreasonable and arbitrary" and set no standards.

Ga. Educ.

The new requirements adopted Wednesday provide alumni, ordinaries and clerks must be "guided and controlled" by a set of standards that take into account the following:

Education

Age of the applicant; past educational record; temperament, demeanor and attitude of the applicant; past criminal record or "other disciplinary problems";

Robert O. Arnold Dr. Caldwell sobriety; marital status; financial ability of the applicant to meet the educational costs; physical and mental fitness; military service record of the applicant; the general reputation of the applicant in the community in which he or she resides.

There is no reference to race in the new standards.

Atlanta, 3-13-58

University Chancellor Harmon W. Caldwell said persons called upon to issue certificates for prospective students have had no standards to guide them in the past.

In other actions Wednesday, the board directed Caldwell to start drawing up requirements for the establishment of junior colleges under an act approved by the last General Assembly.

STATE GRANTS

The act authorizes the payment of state grants of $300 a year per student for each full-time student enrolled in an approved junior college.

Under the act, counties and cities would operate the junior colleges under the supervision of the Board of Regents. The local government agency would provide the building and equipment and pay all costs over and above the state grant.

OFFICERS CHOSEN

At Wednesday's meeting the Regents re-elected all officers of the board for the 1958-59 year including Regent Robert O. Arnold of Covington as chairman. He has headed the board since April, 1951.

The Regents also reelected the presidents of all units of the system with the exception of Dr. Edgar R. Pond, president of the Medical College of Georgia at Augusta who is retiring next June 30. That position will be filled at a later date.

The Regents also approved action which will permit Georgia State College to train teachers. They authorized the college to permit students to take six courses in the field of education as electives which will make them eligible to receive teaching certificates.

Aide Says NAACP Financed Suit

Constitution P1
Atlanta, Ga.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People spent money on the federal court suit seeking to end segregation at Georgia State College, according to a sworn statement by a former president of the Atlanta NAACP.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said Friday that J. H. Calhoun told of the NAACP's part in the suit when state attorneys took a deposition from him.

"The line of questions asked of Calhoun was to determine the good faith of the plaintiffs in filing the suit as to whether the action was an honest effort to be admitted to the school," Cook said. Jud. 11-22-58

"We wanted to know whether they were being encouraged to institute the suits by the NAACP," the attorney general said. "Calhoun admitted the plaintiffs had discussed the case with him before the suit was filed, and the NAACP had spent some money."

Cook said he took depositions from all the plaintiffs in the case about two weeks ago. He said the plaintiffs, who seek entrance to the Atlanta college, all swore to have "not spent one dime" on the suit.

Lawson Investigated 3 in Integration Suit

Atlanta Constitution

The state's investigation of three Negro women who sued to enroll at Georgia State College was conducted by Roger Lawson, Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said.

Cook said Lawson's work was vital to the state's case. Trial of the case ended in federal court here Friday.

Atlanta Jour.

Lawson stated last month that he had quit investigating reports of corruption in state government in order to work on a segregation matter. At the time he said he could not divulge details of what he was doing. Mon. 12-15-58

Lawson, former chairman of the State Highway Board, was appointed last summer by Gov. Griffin to look into charges of corruption in the government. He is on the governor's official payroll at $1,000 a month.

One of the state's principal attacks on the college integration suit was leveled at the moral and scholastic backgrounds of the three Negro plaintiffs. The state introduced evidence—and brought out testimony in cross-examination—designed to show that the Negroes' records would not meet entrance requirements.

Lawson is known to have spent some time in Pennsylvania investigating the background of Mrs. Barbara Hunt, one of the plaintiffs. She acknowledged under cross-examination that she gave birth to one child eight months before she married and gave birth to another child four months after marriage.

Entrance Requirements Imposed After Negro Applied

Post Herald

ATLANTA, Dec. 8 (UPI)—An official of the Georgia University system admitted in Federal court today that most of the strict entrance requirements in the system were imposed after a Negro attempted to enroll in the University of Georgia.

Hall

The testimony of L. R. Siebert, executive secretary of the board of regents, came during the first day of trial in the case of three Negroes seeking to gain admission to the Georgia State College of Business Administration in Atlanta. P. 13

Siebert was asked if recent regulations about admission were not drawn up after a Negro, Horace Ward, tried to get into the University of Georgia Law School in 1950, and he finally admitted this was true.

The Negroes in today's case contended in the non-jury trial that they were barred from the institution solely because of their race. Jour. 12-9-58

The defending state board of regents argued that the Negroes were refused admission because they did not comply with entry requirements. 12-9-58

The plaintiffs — Barbara Hunt, Iris Mae Welch, and Myra Elliott Dinsmore—sat in the packed courtroom of District Judge Boyd Sloan as the highest officials of the state university system began testimony on what seemed to be a long historic case.

Boyd Sloan

The main point of attack by the Negroes was a regulation requiring that two alumni and the county clerk or three alumni must sign applications of all college students in the system.

Under Georgia law public schools or state colleges that admit both Negro and white pupils would have all state funds withdrawn.

John T. Blair, registrar and director of admissions at the college; Chairman Robert O. Arnold of the board of regents, and L. R. Siebert, executive secretary of the board, denied in turn from the witness stand that the racial situation in Georgia affected in any way admission policies.

Atlanta, Dec. 8 (AP) — The chairman of the Georgia board of regents testified in United States District court today that the board "has no policy about any racial matters."

The chairman, Robert O. Arnold of Covington, was the second witness as trial got under way in a suit brought by three Negro women seeking admission to all white Georgia State college in Atlanta.

Arnold acknowledged from the stand that all state supported colleges are segregated and were "long before I came on the board."

The case is being heard by Judge Boyd Sloan without a jury. Jour. 12-9-58

Aim at Application

Attorneys for the women apparently planned to center their attack on a policy at Georgia State which requires applicants to have the endorsement of two alumni before admission is granted.

The women charged that the policy discriminates against Negroes because all graduates of Georgia State are white.

J. D. Blair, registrar at the college and first witness called by the plaintiffs' attorneys, told the court:

"I have never been instructed by the board of regents that Georgia State college is operated exclusively for the enrollment of white students."

There has been no indication how long the trial will last or when the outcome will be made public after arguments end.

Other Cases Pending

Two other cases are pending in Atlanta federal courts but dates have not been set. One attacks the constitutionality of segregation in Atlanta's elementary and high schools. The other, brought by two Negro ministers, seeks to end segregation on the city's buses and trolleys.

The Georgia State suit has been pending since September, 1956. It was originally brought by three women and a man, but the man, Russell T. Roberts, asked that his name be dropped from the complaint.

Barbara Hunt, Iris Mae Welch, and Myra Elliott Dinsmore, charge that in June of 1956 they sought to enter Georgia State and were turned down because entrance requirements are "unreasonable and arbitrary" and "discriminate and unlawfully exclude Negroes from entering" the school.

Georgia law specifies that all appropriations to a state supported college be canceled if the college is ordered to integrate.

President Troy H. Middleton of Louisiana State University appears before legislators in Baton Rouge. At right is William Shaw, counsel of the investigating committee.

By The As

BATON ROUGE, La., June 11—Troy H. Middleton, president of Louisiana State University, told legislative investigators today that "to my knowledge no member of the L. S. U. faculty is teaching integration." "I know of no teaching or philosophy at L. S. U. that would undermine our way of life," he said. A crowded House chamber applauded loudly when he arose to speak. A ten-man legislative committee opened a hearing under orders from the Louisiana House of Representatives, aroused by a petition protesting segregation bills that would close public schools threatened by racial integration.

66 Joined in Petition

Sixty-six faculty members at Louisiana State joined the protest. Their signatures were among 600 on a Louisiana Civil Liberties Union petition opposing eight proposed school segregation measures.

Mr. Middleton, who made the World War II decision to hold Bastogne against the Nazis during the aBttle of the Bulge, calmly told the Legislators that "throughout the years, L. S. U. has advocated a policy of segregation of the races." He said, "To my knowledge, no one at L. S. U. has communistic leanings."

At the start, State Senator W. M. Rainach, one of the South's segregation leaders, pledge that the university would not be made the target of witch hunting.

Representative John Garrett, one of the ten-man committee and a House segregation leader, said, "We're going to get the information from them and then go into the matter further. This is not the end of it.

Night Hearings Likely

"Advocating integration is one thing," Mr. Garrett said. "Teaching it to our children is quite another."

William Shaw, executive counsel of the Joint Legislative Committee on Segregation, and Representative Willborn Jack took the roles of co-counsel for the ten-man legislative investigate group.

Mr. Shaw said today's hearing would be only the start with night hearings probably continuing next week for individual questioning of the sixty-six faculty members under examination.

Senator Rainach said this meeting was called to investigate whether some of the faculty was teaching contrary to the laws of this state and the way of life of our people."

Group Begins Study Of LSU

Committee Is Investigating 'Subversive' Activity

FACULTY UNDER FIRE

By United Press International

BATON ROUGE, La., June 11.—A joint legislative committee opened a study of possible subversive activity at Louisiana State University Wednesday. One member asserted that any faculty members sponsoring integration were walking "hand in hand" with communism.

Gen. Middleton

The committee spent two hours discussing the hiring and firing of faculty members and adjourned its preliminary hearing in an investigation that committee members believe may last weeks.

Angry members of the Louisiana Legislature formed the special investigative group when they learned 66 LSU faculty members had signed a petition opposing proposed segregation legislation.

The petition, according to committee counsel W. M. Shaw, was circulated by the Louisiana branch of the American Civil Liberties Union.

Mr. Shaw said the branch has "a long record of communist connections."

Walk 'Hand In Hand'

The House members felt that "communism and integration walk hand in hand" and anyone, particularly university faculty members, who oppose legislation aimed at keeping Louisiana schools racially pure "must have subversive tendencies," said Representative John Garrett, vice chairman of the special committee.

"It's only the beginning," Mr. Shaw said. He indicated the committee would reconvene Monday after the 66 educators returned a committee questionnaire aimed at getting their specific views on segregation.

During the two-hour hearing by the 10-man committee, headed by Senator W. M. Rainach, the questioning centered largely on administrative procedure at LSU. The committee sat before most of the House and Senate members and a crowded gallery.

Gen. Troy Middleton, president of the university, and four deans of colleges testified. Most of the 66 educators who signed the controversial petition were present. None testified.

The LSU professors were among about 600 signers of the document which was presented to the joint legislative committee on segregation—which Senator Rainach also heads.

Closing Protested

The petition protested legislation aimed at closing public schools in the event they are ordered integrated, and making them private educational facilities.

General Middleton, the first witness, said, "To the best of my knowledge there is no communist activity" at the LSU campus.

He added:

"One man resigned three years ago when it was learned that he might be a communist but he never admitted it."

He said that educators who signed the petition were "acting as individuals and not as representatives of the schools."

General Middleton asserted that the school has acted in "strict observance" of state segregation laws and outlined the school's fight to block the admission of Negro applicants.

He added, however, that it is the university's position that it will always "obey the laws of this country."

LSU Head Denies Integration Charge

BATON ROUGE, La., June 11 (AP)—Legislators who want to find out if anyone is teaching racial mixing or subversion at Louisiana State University recessed public hearings today after school officials said it hasn't.

But, the 10-man committee isn't giving up. It plans to question publicly and individually 66 LSU professors reported to have signed a petition against proposed racial segregation laws.

This questioning will begin next week at night hearings, after the committee receives filled in questionnaires from each.

Troy H. Middleton, president of LSU, told today's hearing, "I know of no teaching or philosophy at LSU that would undermine our way of life." he said.

Middleton, the general who ordered Bastogne held against the Nazis in World War II, added:

"To my knowledge, no one is teaching integration at LSU."

He pointed out that "LSU has advocated a policy of separation of the races, has refused admission to all Negroes and has admitted them only on court orders." LSU has Negroes in its graduate school but none as undergraduates nor on its athletic teams.

The House of Representatives ordered today's two-hour hearing. A petition protesting segregation bills that would close public schools threatened by racial integration aroused the House to this step.

Sixty-six LSU faculty members joined the protest among 600 signers of the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union petition.

At one point, Middleton said: "I have fought two wars and earned four battle stars in order to preserve our way of life. I have no evidence that any member of the faculty has Communistic leanings."

State Sen. William Rainach, a top Southern segregation leader, promised the Committee hearing would not be a witch hunt but a calm, judicial inquiry.

'Witch Hunt' Begins!

Louisiana Will Fire Liberal Educators!

BATON ROUGE—The Louisiana State Legislature last week approved a "purge" of faculty members in Louisiana State University, Southwest Louisiana Institute, Southern University, Grambling College and all state-supported institutions of higher learning following an open hearing after names of 66 LSU instructors were found among 600 on a petition opposing segregation in education.

Minutes after the open hearing the House of Representatives pushed through, in less than a half hour eight bills aimed at preserving racial segregation in state education.

The petition was originated by the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union, George Dreyfous, president.

Anti-Negro legislation at which the petition was aimed provided

1. Continued payment for state or local school officials while away from duties as a consequence of Federal action relating to integration.

2. Authorizes the Governor to close any public school confronted with a fixed date for integration, with additional power to reopen when they can be operated on a segregated basis.

3. Authorizes educational cooperatives by parents for operation of private elementary and secondary schools.

4. Sets up a system of education expense grants to pupils attending such private, nonsectarian schools.

5. Pupil assignment system which also repeals Act 556 of 1954, the first of such laws in Louisiana now held unconstitutional in Federal courts.

6. Prohibits budgeting of any funds for racially mixed schools.

7. Provides that any school official guilty of an intentional act designed to bring about race mixing in public schools shall be guilty of malfeasance in office.

8. Eliminates a section of the State Constitution held unconstitutional in the New Orleans school segregation cases in a legal attempt to offset latest Federal court rulings.

The bills were steered by Representative John Garrett, House segregation leader.

It is the announced intention of the legislature to probe the faculties of all state colleges, however, special questionnaires have been sent the 66 LSU signers of the petition. The queries leave no doubt that termination of employment is the ultimate aim.

THE QUESTIONNAIRE asks if the individual named in the petition sign it, if he understood what he was signing, if he knew that the Civil Liberties Union originated the petition, if he is a member of CLU; is he a member of the Communist party, the NAACP, or the Southern Conference Educational Fund.

Also, it asks if he teaches or openly advocates integratiton in the classes; is he under tenure, or if under contract, what are the terms of the contract. And, finally, what is his position on integration; does he openly advocate integrat on.

PUBLIC HEARINGS RECESSED

LSU Officials Deny Charge Of Teaching Racial Mixing

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Legislators who want to find out if anyone is teaching racial mixing or subversion at Louisiana State University recessed public hearings Wednesday after school officials said it wasn't so.

But, the 10-man committee isn't giving up. It plans to question publicly and individually 66 LSU professors reported to have signed a petition against proposed racial segregation laws.

This questioning will beginneext week at night hearings. After the committee receives filled in questionnaires from each.

Dr. Troy H. Middleton, president of LSU, turned Wednesday's hearing into a personal triumph with his calm, quiet appearance. Applause delayed proceedings at four or five points after the prolonged handclapping that greeted him when he stood up in the crowded House chamber.

"I know of no teaching or philosophy at SLU that would undermine our way of life," he said.

"Throughout the years, LSU has advocated a policy of segregation of the races. To my knowledge, no one at LSU has communistic leanings."

Dr. Middleton, the general who ordered Bastogne held against the Nazis in World War II, added:

"To my knowledge, no one is teaching integration at LSU."

The LSU president's philosophy combines a personal belief in segregation with a determination to uphold the laws. He pointed out that "LSU has advocated a policy of separation of the races, has refused admission to all Negroes and has admitted them only on court orders." LSU has Negroes in its graduate school but none as undergraduates nor on its athletic teams.

The House of Representatives ordered Wednesday's two-hour hearing. A petition protesting segregation bill that would close public schools threatened by racial integration aroused the house to this step.

At one point, Dr. Middleton said: "I have fought two wars and earned four battle stars in order to preserve our way of life. I have no evidence that any member of the faculty has communistic leanings."

Dr. Middleton said all LSU employes had signed loyalty oaths since 1950, but when committee counsel asked him if the FBI investigated prospective teachers, the LSU president said:

"I don't know of anywhere in the United States where the FBI is used in the election of a university faculty."

State Sen. William Rainach, a top Southern segregation leader, promised the committee hearing would not be a witch hunt but a calm, judicial inquiry.

Integrated Retreat In 1955 Stirs New Furor At LSU

By BRYCE MILLER
United Press International Staff

BATON ROUGE, La., June 13.—Louisiana State University officials to investigate and act Friday asked student YM-YWCA had conducted a racially mixed on a story that the campus "Y" "retreat" of white and Negro college students from LSU and Southern University.

The university is currently emmeshed in a legislative investigation of purported "un-American activities" brought on by opposition of a group of 66 university faculty members to proposed segregation legislation.

Joseph J. Mattox Jr., director of public relations at LSU, said the small amount of "official" information gathered by the university during the past 24 hours has been turned over to the board of directors of the campus YM-YWCA. The faculty member who set up the party which occured three years ago, is still employed at LSU.

Policy Clear

"The university's policy with respect to segregation is crystal clear," Mr. Mattox said. "We have departed from it only as required by Federal court orders. If there has been any social activity involving LSU students and Negroes, it has been held without the knowledge and consent of anyone in a position of administrative authority at the university."

Hollis E. Hayward, general secretary of the campus' combined "Y" confirmed UPI information concerning the racially-mixed function. It occured at a YMCA camp—called "Singing Waters"—east of Baton Rouge near Hammond, La.

Ten or 12 Negro students from Southern University and about 33 LSU students participated in the "retreat," which involved picnicking, swimming, volley ball, worship and discussions, Mr. Hayward said.

He told UPI of the incident after a lengthy conference with LSU president, Gen. Troy Middleton. University officials advised Mr. Hayward to "tell the story completely."

The campuses of LSU and the Negro university are located at opposite ends of Baton Rouge.

Favors Integration

Mr. Hayward admits he "favors integration." He said, "All I regret is bringing additional grief to the university at this time."

The university is under attack by a joint legislative committee set up Wednesday to investigate purported "un-American activihad conducted a racially mixed function. It started this week when the Legislature learned 66 faculty members had signed a petition opposing proposed segregation legislation.

UPI learned the legislative investigative committee, steered by Senator W. M. Rainach and Representative John Garrett, the state's two segregation leaders, has access to three tape recordings, including one of an LSU coed telling how she was "duped" into attending the interracial party.

The committee plans to use the tapes in its investigation. The function occurred on April 30-May 1, 1955, according to Mr. Hayward, but Negroes apparently attended only on the final day.

Other tapes reportedly held by the committee concern a telephone conversation between Mr. Hayward and a white man posing as a Negro student from Southern University asking for another "function" at Camp Singing Waters, and a tape made by the cook who prepared meals for the group.

Mr. Hayward, born in Kansas, has worked or attended school in Connecticut, West Virginia, Ohio, California, North Carolina, Colorado and for the past five years has been at LSU. "I am not a communist," he said.

LSU BRANCH OPENS DOOR TO NEGROES

Negro Freshmen First To Mix In The Deep South

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

Louisiana State University agreed today to admit qualified Negro freshmen at its New Orleans branch and 19 immediately signed up.

The court-ordered integration came as a federal judge in Baltimore prepared to hand down a decision on a crucial case intended to end segregation in Virginia schools.

The governor of Virginia asked citizens today to be prepared to sacrifice their public schools if necessary in the civil rights controversy.

After a morning of legal consultation, LSU decided to swing open the gates of its new branch in New Orleans to Negroes who meet the same requirements as white students.

Nineteen students who had been stopped at the gate of the high fence-enclosed institution began signing up for the fall quarter.

Federal Judge Herbert Christenberry struck down segregation at the LSU division Monday and state and school officials had been reported preparing a writ asking suspension of the orders.

The LSU main campus has been integrated at the graduate level for several years.

In Baltimore, Judge Simon P. Sobeloff, of the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, said he will hear Thursday morning an appeal asking for longer than a one-week stay of an order to integrate schools in Warren County, Va.

STUDENT STRIKE ENDS

A strike by white pupils at the Van Buren, Ark., high school was about over today but the 13 Negroes who had been enrolled there, frightened off by the white protest, still were absent. Their parents indicated they will remain out until the federal courts guarantee protection.

A new Citizens Council sprang up in Van Buren and assigned a committee to find out whether integration at the high school can be halted.

Virginia Gov. Lindsay Almond told a news conference that if Virginia can expect to win the "constitutional government" fight, they must be willing to sacrifice their public schools. The state has a law that would close integrated schools.

Almond urged the federal government to return to the "separate but equal" doctrine of education and promised his state would equalize schools if it took a sales tax to do it. He acknowledged the state did not comply with this doctrine prior to the 1954 Supreme Court school decision.

In at atmosphere of growing tension at the approach of the U.S. Supreme Court's deliberation Thursday on the Little Rock, Ark., Central High School case, there were these other developments:

—The school board at Charlottesville, Va., once again defended its refusal to admit 33 Negro students to white schools. Denial of the applications was based on a re-zoning of the city's school system—referred to by a federal judge as "Gerrymandering."

—Warren County, Va., was ordered by Federal District Judge John Paul to admit certain Negroes to the high school at Fort Royal, but was allowed a one week stay.

—Federal District Judge John E. Miller refused to intervene in an anti-integration strike at the Van Buren, Ark., High School. The strike has driven all 13 of the Negro students from the school.

FIRE NEGRO COOK

—A Negro cook at a white school cafeteria in Alexandria, Va., was fired because she brought suit against officials who refused to admit her two children to a white school. School Superintendent T. C. Williams denied the dismissal had anything to do with the integration suit.

—Negro students attended second grades at previously segregated schools in Nashville, Tenn., with no hint of the violence that raged for a week last year when the first grades were desegregated. The federal court's have given their blessing to a grade-by-grade system of integration in the city schools.

—About 50 Negroes took over an all-white city park at Memphis, Tenn., and after a brief demonstration were dispersed by police.

Segregation forces in the South meanwhile kept a close watch on developments in Washington, Little Rock and in several Virginia cities where integration suits are befort the Courts.

Negroes Told Unwanted At LSU Branch

BATON ROUGE (AP) —Louisi[ana] State Un[iversity] has warne[d] Negroes they are "unwanted' and their continued attendance a LSU or its branches would resul[t] in [an] community instead of a feelin[g] of mutual respect...."

It was the strongest statemen[t] issued by the LSU Board of Supervisors in a series of racial integration suits dating back almost 10 years.

After a three-hour discussion Saturday behind closed doors, the board revealed it had asked the State Board of Education when the New Orleans branch of Southern University, state supported Negro institution, would be ready for business.

State Education Supt. Shelby Jackson replied the college site had been purchased and planning was underway, but he didn't set a date for its opening. The new college was authorized by a 1956 special legislative session which appropriated $1,050,000.

The LSU board reaffirmed its policy of "not willingly admitting Negro applicants" unless ordered to by federal courts.

A federal judge last Monday ordered admission of qualified Negro students to LSUNO which began classes Friday.

APPEAL DENIED

As the Negroes began class work, the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals refused to post pone integration.

About 1,500 students enrolled at LSUNO, 89 of them Negroes.

The board pointed out in its statement that any Negro student whose enrollmnt is forced upon the university enters as an unwanted matriculant. It urged the Negroes to attend Southern University, its branch in New Orleans, or "one of the other fine institutions specifically provided for members of their race."

Board Chairman Theo Cangelosi said the board felt the opening of the Southern University branch would "take the heat off LSU, just as establishment of Southern's graduate school had resulted in a decline in the number of Negroes attending on the Baton Rouge campus."

A wooden cross four feet high was burned Saturday under the sign of LSU, located on the edge of Lake Pontchartrain.

Cangelosi said the board plans to prosecute its appeal in the case vigorously.

LSU Bows To Court; Admit 69 Negroes Under Protest

BATON ROUGE, La. — (UPI) — Louisiana State University asserted it would admit only those Negroes it was compelled by the courts to admit.

It warned such Negroes they were "unwanted" and would be considered symbols of defiance to the university's customs.

The LSU board of supervisors adopted this policy at a meeting called to formulate new legal weapons against integration of the university's new commuter branch in New Orleans. The main LSU campus is still segregated except in the graduate school.

The board said any Negro student "whose enrollment is forced upon this university enters as an unwanted matriculant."

In a unanimous resolution, the board said that a Negro's "continued presence will serve as a symbol of defiance to the traditions and customs of the university."

Sixty-nine Negro students enrolled this week at the New Orleans branch of Louisiana State University under the preliminary injunction issued Monday by the federal district Judge Herbert Christenberry.

Friday, a three-judge panel of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld Judge Christenberry's injunction and denied attorneys for the state and LSU a stay of the injunction.

All of the Negroes who registered for classes did so without incident. First classes were held at the integrated undergraduate college Friday.

The board of supervisors moved to launch a branch of the Negro Southern University in New Orleans as a possibly block to Negro attendance at the LSU branch.

The board said Saturday that it was the official policy of the state-supported university that all Negro applicants would be well advised to attend southern, its proposed New Orleans branch or one of the other institutions specifically provided for members of their race by Louisiana taxpayers.

The 1956 Louisiana legislature appropriated $1,050,000 for a branch of Southern in New Orleans.

There are also two all-Negro colleges in New Orleans Xavier University, a Catholic institution, and Dillard university, a private school.

The board of supervisors also said LSU will enroll in its student body only those Negroes whose admission is finally compelled by reason of a valid injunction or court order issued by a court of competent jurisdiction.

Negro Student Expelled at LSU For Carrying Knife

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 20 (UPI)—A Negro student was expelled Saturday from the newly integrated New Orleans branch of Louisiana State University for carrying a knife on the campus.

Dean Homer L. Hitt said the student, whom he would not identify in accordance with LSU policy, was spotted by a white student with the knife protruding from his pocket.

The white student, Hitt said, reported the matter to a campus security guard who, in turn, informed school officials.

The dean said the Negro student told him he was "planning to get the knife sharpened later in the day." Dr. Hitt said the sheath knife was about six inches long.

The dean said all students, white or Negro, would be immediately expelled from LSU if weapons of any kind were found on them.

LSUNO Campus Quiet After Dean's Warning

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Warning against racial outbreaks brought an atmosphere of quietness Friday on the campus of Louisiana State University in New Orleans after several days of incidents protesting Negro students.

The warning signs of "No Loitering" and "Quiet Zone" went up and Dean Homer Hitt said the situation was very quiet and L.S.U. was trying to keep it so.

As an aftermath of the flying of Ku Kluz Klan banners and the posting of signs reading Negro students, groups of white students Friday began circulating petitions on opposing sides of the racial issue.

One petition opposed admission of Negro students—as a student spokesman for the petition put it—on the ground that racial integration "contradicts our moral ideas."

The other petition proposed that Negro students be permitted to attend classes unmolested to determine whether the system will work.

Fifty-nine Negroes are among 1,500 students attending freshman classes at the lake front college now in its first semester of operation.

Negro with Knife Expelled by LSU

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 20 (UPI) An unidentified Negro student, one of 69 enrolled, was expelled today from the integrated New Orleans branch of Louisiana State University for carrying a six-inch knife on the campus.

Dean Homer L. Hitt at the same time warned bluntly that any other students, Negro or white, found carrying weapons of any kind on the campus would be expelled.

Ku Klux Klan Banners Fly At Integrated LSU Branch

NEW ORLEANS (AP)—Banners of the Ku Klux Klan, a symbol of terror in the South a generation ago, flew over Louisiana State University's new branch college Thursday.

Students arriving for early classes found racial taunts scrawled in pink paint on the walls of two college buildings.

The L.S.U. Extension College opened classes this week with more than 50 Negro students admitted by court order. There have been several minor demonstrations against the Negroes and Dean Homer Hitt issued an ultimatum that such conduct could bring suspension or expulsion.

One of the Ku Klux Klan banners was found atop an 80-foot chimney over the boiler building and another suspended from the observation tower of a hangar at the former naval air station.

Rev. Sylvester Lyle told officers a group of white students gathered around his car, rocked it and threatened to beat him. The students denied they threatened Lyle.

Lyle was arrested after declining officers' advice that he leave.

While the parking lot incident was taking place, white students in the campus lounge tossed two giant firecrackers into a group of Negro students sitting in another area.

After the second explosion, university officials ordered all white students from the lounge.

One of the Ku Klux Klan banners was found atop an 80-foot chimney over the boiler building and another from the observation tower of a hangar at the former naval air station.

The scrawled signs said "We Hate Niggers" and "Go Home Niggers." Other scrawlings said "Go Back to Africa" and "Nigger Mau Maus."

Petitions At LSU Rap Integration

Students Flock To Sign As Race Tension Continues

EXPULSION THREATENED

By United Press International

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 19.—White students, threatened by authorities with expulsion for inciting more racial incidents at Louisiana State University's new branch here, Friday began circulating petitions claiming the 69 Negroes are "unwanted."

A second, but much less successful petition also made the rounds. Drafted by four women students, it approved of integration at the new lakefront school and entered a plea for "human rights and privileges."

Students were flocking to sign the segregation petition which objected to the presence of the Negro students who started classes last week under a Federal court injunction.

Campus Life Proceeds

Meanwhile classes and campus life proceeded without incident in contrast to the previous two days, which were marked by exploding firecrackers, racist signs painted on classroom walls, jeers and catcalls, and a Ku Klux Klan flag hoisted atop the building.

In Baton Rouge, LSU board chairman Theo Cangelosi said, "We have complete confidence in Dean Homer Titt's ability to handle the situation so as to assure orderly continuance of our educational program at LSUNO."

In an open letter to students Thursday, Dean Hitt warned that persons involved in further incidents would face expulsion or suspension.

LSU Prexy On Hot Spot In Segregation Battle

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — President Troy Middleton of Louisiana State University, who gave the order to hold Bastogne against the Germans in World War II, faces another hot spot in a school segregation battle.

Louisiana's House of Representatives challenged university officials to explain why 59 faculty members signed a Louisiana Civil Liberties Union petition against segregation bills to close public schools.

The university officials are to appear at a public meeting Wednesday.

"This is a hot spot," said the 58-year-old Mississippi-born Middleton who has declared himself a segregationist. "But I've been on it since 1951."

When Middleton took office in February, 1951, Negroes already were attending LSU graduate schools. They live in university dormitories, eat at LSU cafeterias and are treated as any other students.

TROY MIDDLETON . . . On Hot Seat

There are no Negro undergraduates.

Middleton, as a lieutenant general, commanded troops at the battle of Salerno, the D-Day landing at Normandy, and gave the order that resulted in Brig. Gen. Anthony McAuliffe's reply of "Nuts" when German commanders ordered Americans to surrended during the Battle of the Bulge.

"I'm a Deep Southern boy," he explained. "I believe in segregation. On the other hand, whatever the law is, I'm going to comply with it."

And with the backing of the LSU Board of Governors, Middleton has charted a course between the federal courts on one side and state laws on the other.

What will he say to the lawmakers?

"I haven't been charged with anything yet," he replied.

"I don't know what they will ask me. I'll just have to hear the questions and take it from there."

Middleton, in a former statement two years ago, expressed his philosophy on segregation:

"Irresponsible statements and purely negative actions will never solve the problems raised in Louisiana by the Supreme Court segregation decision. The situation calls for clear thinking, a united front and positive steps.

Louisiana Finds Many Teachers Openly Advocating Integration

BATON ROUGE, La. — (UPI) — The joint Legislative committee searching for anti-segregation activities at Louisiana State University reported Wednesday night it had found five faculty members openly advocating integration and at least 48 others who believe in race integration.

The committee made the report after a closed door "executive session" with George Baillio of Lake Charles, chairman of the LSU Board of Supervisors.

The 53 faculty members "bared" were the major portion of the 66 university employes who signed a petition circulated by the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union in opposition to proposed segregation legislation.

"PROCEDURE" DISCUSSED

After a two-hour session with the committee, Abillio said he discussed "procedure" with the group and answered questions. He said he did not discuss the 66 faculty members who signed the SCLU petition. He declined further comment.

The 10-man committee, headed by Sen. W. M. Rainach—who also heads the joint legislative committee on segregation—make public a nine-page report on the orgin and status of the LCLU and its parent organization, the American Civil Liberties Union ACLU.

The report said the ACLU succeeded the Civil Liberties Bureau, an organization to "encourage draft-dodging and to assist radical movements to obstructing the war effort" in the World War I.

Tulane professors rap intimidation of teachers

NEW ORLEANS—The 160-member Tulane chapter of the American Association of university Professors, last week rapped the Louisiana Legisture for what it described as "discriminatory harrassment" of Louisiana State University professors.

In a warning in the form of a resolution, the Tulane group said the legislature may cause "great damage to higher education" by unjust investigations of LSU faculty members who were among 600 persons to sign an integration petition circulated by the state Civil Liberties Union.

The Civil Liberties petition protested the six segregation bills passed recently by the legislature, including one measure to close public schools rather than integrate as the Federal courts have ordered.

To Investigate 59 Petition Signers

P-1

BATON ROUGE (UPI)—The president and nine deans of Louisiana State University scheduled interviews today with 59 faculty members who signed a petition opposing a package of segregation bills before the Legislature.

The state House of Representatives Monday ordered the officials to question the educators and report their findings to the House on Wednesday. The president and his aides were instructed to ask the faculty members whether they signed the petition, and what their views are on integration.

Legislators also asked the president, Gen. Troy Middleton, to investigate "subversive activities" at the university and "see how far they (Communists) have penetrated into the LSU faculty and administration."

The petition was presented to the state Senate earlier this week by Waldo F. McNier, associate English professor at LSU. McNier and Charles A. Reynard, professor of constitutional law at the LSU Law School, appeared at a House Education Committee hearing Monday in opposition to bills drafted by the joint legislative committee on segregation.

CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION

McNier said he was an officer of the American Civil Liberties Union, which has been cited as a communist front organization by the U. S. House un-American Activities Committee.

Sen. William M. Rainach said a check of the petition, bearing several hundred names, disclosed the names of the faculty members. Middleton told United Press International he had "no idea" the two faculty members had appeared before the committee.

"I will have no comment to make before I appear before the House Wednesday," Middleton said. He added that he expected the deans of the nine colleges to appear with him.

The petition did not state that the signers were opposed to segregation. It voiced opposition to bills designed to shut down schools ordered by federal courts to integrate.

"VERY SERIOUS INCIDENT"

Rep. John Garrett, segregation leader who introduced the resolution to call the 59 faculty members on the carpet, said it was "a very serious incident."

"At the recent hearings of the joint legislative committee on segregation, it was proved that communism and integration are inseparable," Garrett said.

Reynard testified before the committee: "As a Methodist I think the bills are immoral. The Supreme Court held some of our 1954 and 1956 bills unconstitutional. Now we are about to write another letter to Santa Claus."

Meanwhile, the House Public Education Committee Monday unanimously approved the package of eight racial bills and sent the measures to the House floor for action.

"Regardless of what the Supreme Court says, we are going to whip their ears down," Rainach said.

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP)—Sen. W. M. Rainach said his committee hunting integration views within the Louisiana State University faculty will decide Monday whether to grant an American Civil Liberties Union request for its two top officers to appear.

A telegram asking the chance to speak was sent to Rainach by Ernest Angell, ACLU chairman of the board, and Patrick Murphy Malin, executive secretary, New York City.

William Shaw, counsel of the 10-man Rainach committee, had attacked the ACLU during legislative questioning of LSU President Troy H. Middleton last Wednesday.

"Our committee will decide whether to invite Angell and Malin," Chairman Rainach said. "The ACLU record is rather clear, and I don't know that they could add to the record here.

"I have no objections if they want to come to Louisiana to attend the hearings," Rainach added. "They could sit around in case they were asked to say something."

The Rainach committee consists of many of the members of his joint legislative committee on segregation, official segregation "watchdog" for the state.

Rainach said he new committee primarily is concerned with LSU and dosen't want to get involved "in anything which could divert committee members from the task at hand."

The new 10-man group, formed by the House last week, will meet again Monday and plot its future course.

"The committee already has a heavy work load," the chairman said. "We have information from volunteer sources which we would want to verify before using, we don't want to harm anyone unjustly. We want to coorelate and authenticate all information."

The committee, under House orders, had questioned LSU President Middleton and five deans last Wednesday. It went into action under a cloud of anger in the House after members found 66 LSU faculty members had signed a Civil Liberties Union petition opposing eight new segregation measures.

Signed by some 600 persons, the stormy petition opposed plans by Rainach and his segregation chiefs to shut public schools when threatened with integration. The eight bills involved already have passed the House and are awaiting a Senate committee hearing.

President declares—

LSU faculty not for integration

BATON ROUGE, La., June 11—(AP)—President Troy H. Middleton of Louisiana State University told legislative investigators today, "To my knowledge no member of the LSU faculty is teaching integration."

"I know of no teaching or philosophy at LSU that would undermine our way of life," he said, adding that there is no indication that either students or faculty has concerned themselves very much with the integration issue.

A crowded House chamber loudly applauded when he arose to speak.

6-11-58

A 10-MAN committee opened a hearing under orders from the House of Representatives, aroused by a petition protesting segregation bills which would close public schools threatened by racial integration.

Sixty-six LSU faculty members joined the protest. Their signatures were among the 600 on a Louisiana Civil Liberties Union petition opposing eight proposed school segregation measures.

Middleton, who made the World War II decision to hold Bastogne against the Nazis during the Battle of the Bulge, told the legislators throughout the years, LSU had advocated a policy of segregation of the races. And Middleton said, "To my knowledge, no one at LSU has communistic leanings."

AT THE START, State Sen. W. M. Rainach, one of the South's segregation leaders, pledged that LSU will not be made the target of witchhunting.

Rep. John Garrett, one of the 10-man committee and a House segregation leader, said, "We're going to get the information from them and then go into the matter further. This is not the end of it.

"Advocating integration is one thing," Garrett said. "Teaching it to our children is quite another."

W. M. Shaw, executive counsel of the joint legislative committee on segregation, the regular segregation "watchdog committee" and Rep. Willborn Jack took the roles of co-counsel for the investigative group.

SHAW SAID today's hearing would be only the start, with night hearings probably continuing next week for individual questioning of the 66 LSU faculty members under examination.

Sen. Rainach said this meeting was called to investigate whether some of the LSU faculty was teaching contrary to the laws of this state and the way of life of our people.

"This committee is not a witchhunting body, I would like to make clear in advance. We are here to find the facts to the best of our ability with the cooperation of the LSU administration," Rainach said.

"I ALSO would like to say that the vast majority of the faculty, and certainly the vast majority of the administration, want to uphold our laws and they want to maintain our way of life."

Rainach said, "The only concerted opposition we have found has come from the Louisiana branch of the American Civil Liberties Union and the Southern Conference Educational Fund." He said the conference is the leader in the movement.

Call LSU Profs On Carpet For Integration Stands

The Louisiana House has ordered the president and nine deans of Louisiana State University to appear before the House to answer questions about "subversive activities" at the institution.

The summons came in the form of a resolution following a meeting of the House public education committee during which two LSU professors testified they favored integration of whites and Negroes.

The lawmakers said in the resolution they were "highly disturbed by such disclosures, and (were) entitled to know how far reaching such activities are with respect to the LSU faculty and administration."

President Troy Middleton and the deans were asked to appear before the lawmakers at 3 p.m. CST Wednesday. Copies of the resolution were sent to Middleton and each of the deans.

Waldo F. McNeir, assistant English professor, told the committee a package of eight segregation proposals up for consideration were "un-American and undemocratic."

McNeir presented the lawmakers earlier this week with a petition signed by 59 LSU faculty members and several hundred other persons opposing segregation.

McNeir and Reynard, a former executive counsel to Gov. Earl Long during the 1956 legislature, appeared voluntarily before the committee to oppose the bills.

Middleton said he did not know the pair had offered to testify. He had no comment on the summons from the lawmakers.

Sen. W. M. Rainach, chairman of the joint legislature committee on segregation, said of the petition: "When you see 59 people put their names on something coming from LSU against the children and people of Louisiana, you begin to wonder what is wrong with LSU."

The committee unanimously passed out the bills to the House floor for a final vote.

McNeir and another LSU faculty member, Charles A. Reynard, professor of constitutional law, drew angry retorts from committee members when they spoke in opposition to the measures.

Reynard said the Supreme Court had already held some Louisiana segregation laws unconstitutional. "Now we are about to write another letter to Santa Claus," he said.

Reynard said that "as a Christian and a Methodist, I regard segregation as immoral."

LEGISLATIVE PROBE

College President Denies LSU Teaches Integration

BATON ROUGE, La., June 11 (AP)—Legislators who want to find out if anyone is teaching racial mixing or subversion at Louisiana State University recessed public hearings today after school officials said it wasn't so.

The 10-man committee isn't giving up. It plans to question publicly and individually 66 LSU professor reported to have signed a petition against proposed racial segregation laws.

This questioning will begin next week at night hearings after the committee receives filled-in questionnaires from each.

Dr. Troy H. Middleton, president of LSU, turned today's hearing into a personal triumph with his calm, quiet appearance. Applause delayed proceedings at four or five points after the prolonged handclapping that greeted him when he stood up in the crowded House chamber.

"I know of no teaching or philosophy at LSU that would undermine our way of life," he said.

"Throughout the years, LSU has advocated a policy of segregation of the races. To my knowledge no one at LSU has communistic leanings."

Dr. Middleton, the general who ordered Bastogne held against the Nazis in World War II, added: "To my knowledge, no one is teaching integration at LSU."

The LSU president's philosphy combines a personal belief in segregation with a determination to uphold the laws. He said that "LSU has advocated a policy of separation of the races, has refused admission to all Negroes and has admitted them only on court orders." LSU has Negroes in its graduate school but none as undergraduates nor on its athletic teams.

The House of Representatives ordered today's two-hour hearing. A petition protesting segregation bills that would close public schools threatened by racial integration aroused the House to this step.

Sixty-six LSU faculty members joined the protest among 600 signers of the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union petition.

Dr. Middleton said all LSU employes had signed loyalty oaths, but when committee counsel asked him if the FBI investigated prospective teachers, the LSU president said:

"I don't know of anywhere in the United States where the FBI is used in the election of a university faculty."

State Sen. William Rainach, a top Southern segregation leader, promised the committee hearing would not be a witch hunt but a calm, judicial inquiry.

Study of LSU pro-integration feeling pressed

BATON ROUGE, La., July 10 (AP)—A legislative committee will continue to hunt pro-integration feeling at Louisiana State University meeting at least once before the opening of the Fall term.

Sen. W. M. Rainach, chairman of the committee and head of the joint legislative committee on segregation, said following a two-hour closed meeting here yesterday the group would have specific recommendations to make after their next meeting.

RAINACH SAID the recommendations will be made to the public, rather than to the Legislature or LSU.

"We believe we have made excellent progress so far," Rainach said. "We are well pleased with the way investigation is progressing."

He said the full committee voted yesterday to continue to hunt pro-integration sentiment at LSU after hearing a report on progress to date.

The joint House-Senate committee was named following a tumultious house education committee hearing at which several LSU faculty members opposed measures calling for the closing of public schools threatened with integration.

The committee later announced 66 LSU faculty members had signed a Louisiana Civil Liberties Union petition opposing the segregation measures.

DISCRIMINATION

Negro Students Sign Up for Classes at LSUNO

THE FIRST TWO Negro students to register at Louisiana State university in New Orleans are Josephine Eli, 17, of 8913 Colapissa, and Harold Fontenette, 18, of 8427 Cohn, pictured Tuesday as they signed up for their classes. Assisting them are Dr. Marie Lagarde and Dr. Albert Meyers, faculty members. The white students registering in the background are unidentified.

University Lawyers Ask Stay of Mandate

Two Negro students registered Tuesday in the freshman class of Louisiana State university in New Orleans.

They were the first of an estimated 80 Negro students expected to enroll at the new lakefront college in the next two days.

Spokesmen for the university said they are the first two Negroes to enter LSU's undergraduate school.

The two are Josephine Eli, 17, 8913 Colapissa, a graduate of Walter L. Cohen High school and majoring at LSU in elementary education, and Harold Fontenette, 18, 8427 Cohn, a graduate of Booker T. Washington school and majoring now in social sciences.

24 SEEK ENTRANCE

They were among a group of 24 Negro students who sought entrance to LSUNO under the terms of a federal court order which enjoins the university from exercising its policy of not accepting Negro students in the undergraduate body.

Attorneys for LSU applied to the fifth circuit court of appeals late Tuesday afternoon for a stay of the district court mandate. Appeals court Judge John M. Wisdom gave them, and counsel representing the Negro plaintiffs, until 3 p. m. Wednesday to file written briefs.

There was no indication when Judge Wisdom would rule on the LSU application for a stay. Classes start Friday.

In its application LSU said the defendants "intend to appeal the judgment of the district court" and asked for the stay "in order that the status quo be mandated until further final determination of this matter . . . (and) until such time as applicants (LSU) have been afforded the opportunity of exhausting their appellate remedies."

APPEAL INDICATED

This indicated LSU's intention to appeal the district court decision Monday of Judge Herbert W. Christenberry to the fifth circuit court of appeals.

The first of the 24 Negroes to seek enrollment arrived at the university, formerly the base of the Naval air station, at about 7:30 a. m. Tuesday. Others continued to arrive until by mid-morning there were two dozen.

Dean Homer L. Hitt asked them to remain on the campus in the shade of the administration building. As they waited, the first of the white students were registered in alphabetical order.

At about 10 a. m., Rev. Sylvester Lyle, a Negro minister who accompanied the group and whose son is one of those intending to enroll, asked Dean Hitt to make a classroom available for the group to wait in. The dean complied.

Dean Hitt explained he was in contact with LSU attorneys in Baton Rouge, waiting their advice in the matter.

JUDGEMENT SERVED

At 10:30 a. m. a deputy US marshal served LSUNO's registrar, W. R. Burleson, with a copy of the district court judgement, and half-an-hour later, after a further conference with the attorneys, Dean Hitt said the Negroes would be enrolled, in alphabetical order as in the case of the white students.

It was not until 2:30 p. m. that the alphabetical registration procedure had reached the point where any of the Negroes could register.

At that time Miss Eli and Fontenette appeared and were registered. The remainder of the group will be registered Wednesday and Thursday along with nearly 60 others who did not appear Tuesday.

There was no incident, the white students appearing to ignore the Negro pair.

Asked for comment, Miss Eli said: "I feel fine and I think this is a nice idea. Everything has gone smoothly and I am looking forward to my first school year."

Fontenette commented, "I'm happy to be here. I wanted to attend some college but the others are so high (in tuition). Yes, I've been well treated."

The LSUNO general fee for residents of Louisiana is $25 a semester.

OTHERS IN GROUP

The other Negroes in the initial group are:

Daniel Lewis, 19, 1268 Caton, sociology; Ferdinand Fortune, 19, 1467 N. Johnson, education; Charles Smith, 18, 3419 Fourth, premedical; Gwendolyn Agnes Norman, 18, 5018 N. Prieur, elementary education; Peggy Burton, 19, 2614 Cadiz, elementary education;

Walter Lee Peck, 21, 1263 S. Rocheblave, agriculture education; Rosalee McKinley, 17, 4714 Colapissa, nursing; Audrey Page, 17, 2715 Sixth, Spanish; Sametta Harvey, 17, 3408½ Fourth, elementary education; Joseph Narcisse, 20, 3137 Pauger, electrical engineering;

Jo-Ann Gaskin, 17, 1312 Caton, education; Louise Williams, 16, 3308½ Fourth, business education; Charles Gibson, 17, 1719 St. Philip, engineering; Dorothy Caulfield, 17, 2832 LaSalle, business administration;

Yvonne Buckles, 17, 2332 Melpomene, education; Peggy Jackson, 17, 1423 LaSalle, political science and government; Wilson Fleming Jr., 21, 621 N. Derbigny, biology; Philip Mitchell, 18, 8913 Forshey, preengineering; Sylvester Lyle Jr., 17, 9013 Palmetto, psychology; Rose Mary Mays, 18, 3814 Third, social studies; Lucy Mae Madere, 18, 3420 D'Aquin, and Millie Joseph, 18, 2542 Mistletoe.

LSU bows to court order; Negroes enter

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9—(AP)—Atty. Gen. Rogers today submitted to Little Rock, Ark., officials a proposed federal-local plan in the event Central High School there is directed to continue its racial integration program.

The attorney general released letters addressed to City Manager Dean Dauley and President Wayne Upton of the Little Rock School Board setting out the cooperative proposal. Rogers had received word the communications were now in their hands.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 9—(AP)—Louisiana State University's commuters college here said today it would honor a court order and register qualified Negro students.

Dean Homer Hitt said he had been advised by university attorneys to proceed with the registration.

Federal Judge Herbert Christenberry yesterday ordered the school to desegregate.

Hitt conferred with A. P. Tureaud, chief council for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, shortly before issuing the announcement.

A GROUP OF 23 NEGROES were among the first arrivals for the three-day registration. They received a cool welcome, waited on the steps for about three hours, and were later moved to another building "to make them more comfortable."

Hitt told the Negro group he was sorry to make them wait and explained the college had not received any official communication of the court order.

Hitt said Negro students would be treated the same as white students.

Hitt said the college, beginning operations for the first time today, had 84 Negro admission applications on file. He said he was unable to comment on how many were qualified, explaining all applicants would have to meet admission standards.

TROUBLE CONTINUED to brew in Van Buren, Ark., where U. S. District Judge John E. Miller declined to give immediate relief to Negro students ousted from high school by a white boycott.

He suggested that an attorney for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People file a new suit seeking a temporary injunction. The attorney indicated he would follow the judge's advice.

Negro leaders at Van Buren indicated that none of the Negro pupils will return to school pending the outcome of the court action.

A white citizens committee opposed to integration of the high school named a new leader and appointed a committee to confer with the city school board on ways of restoring segregation. One plan involved construction of a Negro high school.

WARREN COUNTY, in Northwest Virginia's horse and orchard country, was spared momentarily Monday from the threat of having its high school closed under state law which makes it illegal for any school to operate on a racially mixed basis.

Federal Judge John Paul directed the Warren County School Board to admit 22 Negroes to the county's lone high school, but granted a stay until Sept. 15 to allow the board to seek a formal stay pending appeal from one of the three justices of the Fourth U. S. Circuit Court.

In New Orleans, Federal Judge Herbert W. Christenberry signed a preliminary injunction to force the Louisiana State University Commuters' College to admit Negroes.

SIDELIGHTS on the integration front came from Omaha, Neb., where Alfred C. Kennedy, realtor, insisted Negroes have responsibility to solve their own housing problem.

And in New York, parents of Negro students kept their children home from Harlem schools yesterday because, they said, "We want the children sent to schools out of the neighborhood which are better integrated."

In LSUNO Outbreak

White Students' Ousting Upheld

BATON ROUGE — Gen. Troy H. Middleton, president of Louisiana State University, has upheld the suspension of four New Orleans white students from LSU's unit in that city, following recent racial disorders. Three of the four students had appealed the suspension order by LSUNO's six-man administrative committee.

The three who appealed were identified as Gordon Novell, 21; A. Roswell Thompson Jr., 20, and Bob Holmes, 19, all of New Orleans. The youth who did not appeal was not identified.

Following a visit by the three youths last week, General Middleton said in a statement printed in the LSU campus newspaper, Reveille:

"We must have discipline on the campus to maintain an effective educational program. This cannot be done with disturbance continuing. It is up to the university officials to maintain peace and quiet.

"People unwilling to observe order and decorum will be dropped from the university's rolls."

The four were dropped following outbreaks and demonstrations against the 58 Negro students who were admitted to LSUNO by Federal Court order.

Educator Is Released

Clennon King Is Ruled Sane

By RICHARD F. ROPER

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI) — Educator Clennon King, committed to the State Mental Hospital 12 days ago after he tried to enter the all-white University of Mississippi, was ruled sane Wednesday. He immediately left with his wife and brother.

Dr. W. L. Jaquith, hospital director, declined to elaborate on the ruling and said only that the board of psychiatrists "completed its examination" of King at a meeting Wednesday.

State officials said when King was seized June 5 that he would be charged with disturbing the peace and resisting arrest at Oxford and would face a trial if he were found sane. But Atty. Gen. Joe T. Patterson said Wednesday the state did not plan to prosecute.

"We don't persecute anyone," Patterson said.

The controversial professor, who said he wanted to enter the university because no Negro college could offer the courses he wanted in his quest for a Ph.D. in history, was carried bodily from the campus when he refused to leave.

NEWSMEN BARRED

Newsmen were not allowed inside the Administration Building when King entered, but plain clothes state officers said later he went beserk when university officials refused to give him a definite answer on his application.

SECOND PETITION

Only a few hours before his release, King's attorneys had filed a second petition for a writ of habeas corpus to free him from the institution. They went to Rankin County Circuit Court in nearby Brandon after being told the Hinds County Circuit Court did not have jurisdiction in the case because the hospital is in Rankin County.

The hospital gave no advance notice when the doctors would rule on King's sanity.

Jaquith said King was released at 4:15 p.m. and "left with his wife and brother."

Jaquith said he did not know their destination, but it was believed they were heading either for Jackson or for King's home in Gulfport, 200 miles South.

King's brother, C. B. King of Albany, Ga., has been in Jackson acting as the Negro professor's attorney since he was seized in Oxford. Mrs. King was believed to be in Jackson the entire time but remained secluded.

King's committment to the hospital came at the end of a two-year period during which he reversed his field completely on the segregation issue.

MARCH 1957

In March 1957, while he was a professor at Alcorn A&M College for Negroes he wrote a series of articles for a Jackson newspaper in which he criticized the NAACP and urged government aid for Negroes who wished to settle in Africa.

King, 38, won the praise of segregationists, but Alcorn students called him an "Uncle Tom," and scorned him as disloyal to his race. In their indignation they refused to attend classes, and the state-supported college had to close the rest of the term.

Also a minister, King found his congregation was shunning him so he moved to Gulfport where he found another pastorate.

Last month King announced he planned to enter the university but he was not taken seriously. He said that if he was not admitted he would ask that he be sent to Africa.

King arrived in Oxford early on June 5, after a 300-mile bus ride from Gulfport. Gov. J. P. Coleman said later that plain clothes state officers had followed him from the time he boarded the bus until he arrived on the university campus.

University officials refused to give King a definite answer on his application, and officers said he went beserk in the Administration Building.

Public Safety Commissioner Tom Scarbrough said officers then escorted King from the building, but the state refused for 24 hours to disclose that he had been lodged in a highway patrol station jail cell at Jackson prior to the lunacy hearing in Hinds Chancery Court.

King was quoted after he was removed from the university campus as saying he had given up in his efforts to enroll and wanted only his freedom.

King Leaves For Georgia

Convinced Authorities Don't Want Him In Mississippi

TELLS ABOUT ARREST

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., June 19. — Negro educator Clennon King boarded a plane for Atlanta Thursday for a "change of scenery" after his 12-day confinement in the state mental hospital, where he was committed after trying to enter the all-white University of Mississippi.

King told reporters at the airport he was "completely through" with his attempt to enter the university, but he said he thought "the state owes me something" for holding him in the hospital against his will.

In his first press conference since he was seized at the university June 5, King said he shouted for help in the administration building only because plainclothes officers took him into the basement.

"I didn't know what they might do to me," he said, "so I shouted in hopes the reporters outside might hear me."

Reason For Arrest

Public Safety Commissioner Tom Scarbrough maintained King was arrested because he was running through the university registrar's office shouting for help and refused to leave the building.

But King said he "tried to leave, but they wouldn't let me go unless I left in their custody.

"That was the reason I refused to go," King said. "I wanted to be free."

Dressed in black trousers and a white dress shirt with collar open and his sleeves rolled up, King boarded a Delta Airlines flight to Atlanta at 2:17 p.m.

"I'm definitely convinced the people in authority do not want me in Mississippi," King said.

To See Father

King said he was going to the home of his father and his brother, C. B. King, in Albany, Ga. for "a change of scenery."

He said his wife, who had remained in seclusion in Jackson while he was confined to the hospital, would return home to Gulfport, Miss., to care for their children.

King said he did not know how long he would stay in Albany. "I might be back sooner than I think," he said.

Charges of disturbing the peace and resisting arrest are still pending against King at Oxford, site of the university, and warrants have been sworn out. But speculation in Jackson was that the state would not prosecute if King would drop his efforts to enroll at the university.

The hospital's report, made public Thursday, said it was the "unanimous opinion of the medical staff that he was without psychosis. By this, we mean that we could find no evidence of mental disorder.

"He is competent and responsible," the report concluded.

Asked how he was treated at the hospital, King said, "I certainly don't feel any malice" toward the staff.

"Had I been the doctor, I would have refused any such political case," he said. "It casts a shadow on the hospital."

He said he thought Gov. J. P. Coleman "or someone else in authority" should apologize to him for his treatment and that the state should "repay my family for all the expense they have had to go to."

King Unlikely To Be Sought For Charges

Extradition of Clennon W. King from Georgia to Mississippi is an extreme improbability.

The Negro professor who was released from Mississippi State Hospital at Whitfield Wednesday left yesterday for Georgia.

Charges of creating a disturbance and resisting an officer are still pending against King in Lafayette county, but both of those charges are misdemeanors and not felonies. The charge arose when the Negro tried to register at the University.

Extradition of a person from one state to another is normally not done where only a misdemeanor is involved, and no record of such a case is immediately available to cite as a reference.

Extradition is a legal maneuver of exchange agreed to by the two governors of the states involved, but if King were extradited the district attorney in the Oxford area would initiate the proceedings and channel them through the Governor's office.

That's extremely unlikely.

King Says Officers, Not People, Threat

ALBANY, Ga. (UPI)—Clennon King, Negro educator-minister who tried in vain to enroll at the all-white University of Mississippi fled home for his "safety" and said he will demand an apology from Mississippi Authorties.

King, 37, arrived by plane coatless and without baggage Thursday night about 24 hours after he ended a stay in a Mississippi mental institution where doctors declared him sane.

"I have been treated very badly," he said. "If there is no apology, I will sue the state of Mississippi the way they have acted."

King was spirited to the mental institution by state troopers when he tried to break through Mississippi's segregation barriers June 5. His whereabouts was kept secret for 48 hours. P. 1

NO THREATS FROM PEOPLE

Mississippi's Gov. J. P. Coleman and other officials said the action was taken in this fashion to safeguard the Negro from possible danger.

"There were no threats against me from the people," King said. "But those in authority told me I was in danger from people they called crackpots and extremists.

"My fear is of the officials, not the crackpots," King said.

King, pronounced sane by a panel of 17 doctors after a 12-day stay in the mental hospital, visited the home of his father, Clennon King, Sr., who operates a Negro grocery store, real estate and insurance business here.

STILL FACES CHARGES

The Negro still faces Mississippi charges of disturbing the peace and resisting arrest, filed against him in connection with his integration attempt, and an old charge of taking the lock off the door of a church.

"I took the lock off the door of a church I pastored in a dispute with some of the congregation," he said. "It would all amount to a year in jail and a $1,000 fine.

"My only fear of jail is what might happen to me in the jail—the authorities are the only ones who have threatened me."

King said he will stop trying to enter any white college or university in Mississippi and will not return to the state "if I feel that I am really unwelcome." But he added:

"THINK I SHOULD PROTEST"

"If they do not withdraw the warrants against me, and the state does not make some statement of regret and reimburse all the expenses, I think I should protest in some way.

"iMaybe I am crazy in that I feel if the officials had left the matter alone it would have been all right," he said. "There was no sign of trouble except from them. I think they wanted trouble."

King's brother, C. B. King of Albany, attempted unsuccessfully to free his brother by petitioning for a writ of habeas corpus, but the Mississippi judge said the petition was filed in the wrong court.

Clennon King Says He'll Be Back When He Gets 'Feeling'

Jackson News
Jackson Mississippi

ALBANY, Ga. (UPI) — Negro minister Clennon King vowed today he would eventually return to Mississippi where he was held in a mental institution following his attempt to enroll at the University of Mississippi.

King, 36, said he had both white and Negro supporters in Mississippi. He intimated an organization might be formed there to combat "unfounded charges against me and reimburse me" for financial losses resulting from the arrest.

King arrived in Atlanta by plane Thursday night without baggage, less than 24 hours after doctors at the mental institution declared him sane.

King said he would not make his return in the near future. He said he planned to remain in Georgia because of "intimidation" and try to determine the "feeling" in Mississippi.

Negro Clennon King Leaves Mississippi Disappointed

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Clennon King, the controversial Negro who landed in a mental hospital after trying to enter the all-white University of Mississippi, left the state by plane Thursday, claiming "they know they've done me wrong." Sat 6-20-58

King, a native of Albany, Ga., said he would return there "for a change in scenery." He did not say when he would return. P. 16

King told newsmen at the airport, "I don't want to stay in Mississippi if I'm not wanted. I haven't been treated right in Mississippi.

"I think Gov. J. P. Coleman should apologize to me and that the state should reimburse my family for the expenses in setting me free. They know they've done me wrong.

"I'm disillusioned. I don't feel free in Mississippi."

King, released from the state mental hospital at nearby Whitfield Wednesday, still faces charges of disturbing the peace and resisting arrest in Lafayette County, where the university is located.

Officials charge he went berserk while trying to enter the school two weeks ago.

However, no attempt was made to stop him at the airport and King seemed at ease as he boarded the plane alone.

Lafayette County authorities said the charges were still outstanding and probably would be pressed later.

The mental hospital made no comment on King's sanity, but the hospital cannot release a patient if he is insane.

King to get santity test—

Negro in isolation cell after attempt to enroll at Ole Miss

Carried from campus; vows he's given up

BY DOUGLAS STARR

JACKSON, Miss., June 6 —(AP)— Negro Professor Clennon King earned an isolated jail cell today for his efforts to cross the state's rigid racial lines. He said his attempt to enter the University of Mississippi is ended.

The 37-year-old former faculty member at the all-Negro Alcorn A&M (Miss.) College was whisked away by State Highway Partolmen yesterday when he tried to enter the Summer session at the University.

His whereabouts were top secret until late last night when The Associated Press learned he was being held in a tiny cell on the top floor of the State Highway Patrol headquarters here and held an exclusive tape-recorded interview.

THE INTERVIEW came only an hour before the Highway Patrol threw a cordon of troopers around the building and refused anyone access to the tall, Georgia-born King.

"I just want to get out o here," King said in the interview tape recorded by Norman Bergsma of The Jackson Daily News.

"I don't know what they're going to do." King told his interviewers. "I would like to get out. I wouldn't bother it any more. I would leave it alone."

But state authorities may not leave King alone. They indicated he would be examined by physicians. Chancery Clerk J. B. Howell of Oxford, who filed a lunacy warrant against King, said "if they conclude his mind is a little off, they will send him to Whitfield (state hospital) for psychiatric examinations".

The state mental hospital, like other state institutions, is racially segregated.

King was taken from a line of students waiting to register for Summer school at the University at Oxford yesterday and was told 'that if I came back on the campus I would be arrested."

King said University Registrar Robert Ellis told him the situation of registering was "just about hopeless." He said he asked that his application forms be returned, but was refused, and said he wanted to return to the waiting line.

"When I sought to leave the room they forced me out another entrance," King continued and said he was carried to a waiting car.

KING SAID he was not mistreated and Gov. J. P. Coleman, who ordered troopers to the campus to preserve the peace, said "all of his legal rights will be fully preserved."

Prior to the discovery that King was held in the state police building here, none of the state authorities would reveal where he was held. There was also no indication how long he would be held or if he would be taken to Whitfield for psychiatric examination.

His 10x8 cell is windowless but air-conditioned. Its bright ceiling light can be turned off only from the outside.

Mental Test Set For Negro In White School Entry Try

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—A lunancy panel Friday ordered a mental examination for a Negro college professor who sought unsuccessfully to enroll in all-white University of Mississippi.

"They are not doing me right at all," sobbed the 37-year-old Clennon King as he was led away to Mississippi State (mental) Hospital at nearby Whitfield.

Hinds County Chancery Clerk Frank Scott ordered the examination upon recommendation of two physicians who certified King's mental state was in doubt. The hospital must examine the Negro as speedily as possible and report to the clerk.

Gov. J. P. Coleman said if King is insane he will be committed to the hospital for treatment. If he is sane, he will be tried on charges of disturbing the peace and resisting arrest at the university.

Coleman said the former Alcorn A&M (Negro) College history professor was arrested Thursday when he refused to leave the university administration building without registering. He had been told he could not register until his application had been approved —standard college procedure.

Coleman told a news conference, Friday, King's refusal to follow procedure proved "his complete unfitness to become a student in any of the educational institutions supported by the state."

The governor said the Georgia-born professor went berserk when school authorities and state officers sought to persuade him to leave the campus and await a decision on his hopes to enroll as a graduate student.

King was carried bodily to a waiting station wagon and whisked off the campus by patrolmen in plain clothes. Coleman said he was brought to state patrol headquarters because he threatened, if released, to return immediately to the campus.

The professor was held incommunicado in a cell and Coleman and other officers refused to disclose his whereabouts.

But photographer Norm Bersma of the Daily News and The Associated Press succeeded in tape-recording an interview with King through the cell door, the news of which resulted in Coleman ordering guards posted around the building.

Coleman said King's whereabouts were kept secret to prevent possible disorder.

In the interview, King said he wanted only to "get out of here. I don't know what they're going to do. I would like to get out. I wouldn't bother it any more. I would leave it alone."

He was referring to his attempt at registering.

Negro's Sanity Challenged After Rebuff At Ole Miss

By RUDY P. ABRAMSON

UNIVERSITY, Miss., June 5.—A Negro preacher who made an unsuccessful attempt to register at the University of Mississippi Thursday morning became the subject of a petition calling for a lunacy test a few hours later.

The action came when Rev. Clennon King, former teacher at Alcorn A & M, refused to leave the University after a brief conference with Hugh Clegg, assistant to Chancellor J. D. Williams.

He was later hustled into a car by plain clothes officers stationed on the campus to prevent a possible demonstration. That possibility never developed as a group of 100 waited outside the Lyceum building for a glimpse of King.

Examination Is Asked

"In my judgment, the man (King) is unbalanced," State Safety Commissioner Tom Scarbrough said, "and I understand there is to be an investigation by proper authorities."

Thursday afternoon, Lafayette County Sheriff Boyce Bratton asked Chancery Clerk J. B. Howell for the lunacy examination for King. Mr. Howell said King would have to be taken before two physicians and "if they say he should be sent to Whitfield (the state mental hospital) we would send him down."

King's whereabouts could not be learned early Thursday night.

King came to the university to register for work in the department of history during the summer session which opens Friday.

Refused To Leave

He was taken from the campus at 11:45 after spending more than an hour and a half refusing to leave the registrar's office after his business had been completed.

Several Ole Miss students who were at the side of the Administration Building when King was slipped away said they saw plain clothes men carry him bodily and put him into a police car.

"When he had finished discussing his application for admission, he refused to leave for over an hour and a half," Commissioner Scarbrough said. "I talked with him about leaving peacefully and waiting for the decision of authorities on his application."

Negro Seeks Mississippi U. Enrollment

JACKSON, Miss., May 29 (UPI)—Clennon King, former Negro college professor, announced today he will attempt to enroll in the University of Mississippi June 5 despite the fact he does not have the recommendation of five alumni.

He told Registrar Robert B. Ellis that he will be impossible for me to have more than four recommendations [illegible] County alumni" and asked to be admitted on that.

The school requires for admission recommendation of five alumni from the applicant's home county. The requirement was made to keep Negroes from the all-white institution.

Dr. E. R. Jobe, board secretary, said he had no comment on what action the board would take.

King, who is pastor of a church in Gulfport, said regardless of the decision he would try and enroll for Summer school. He is seeking a doctor's degree in history.

King has been a controversial figure since he stirred a student revolt at Alcorn A&M College where he taught history by a series of newspaper articles attacking the NAACP. He later was fired and also was dismissed as pastor of a Methodist Church in Hazlehurst.

HECTIC DAY — King, who entered the Lyceum with no fanfare early yesterday, was subject of a petition for a lunacy test yesterday afternoon.

Commissioner Scarbrough said he left the building to seek legal advice and "upon my return, he was running through a suite of rooms in the registrar's offices shouting 'Help, help, help,' although there was no one with him and no possible chance of anyone harming him."

"In this state of affairs, we escorted him to a nearby car and drove him off the campus," Mr. Scarbrough said. "He was not harmed in any way."

Will Forward Papers

The only statement from the university in regard to King came from Mr. Clegg.

"We have received his papers," he said in reference to King's application, "and they will be forwarded to the Board of Trustees of the Institutions of Higher Learning. Any statement concerning the papers will have to come from the state board at Jackson."

Mr. Clegg did not disclose whether King had the five recommendations from school alumni which are required for admission of a new student. King told reporters Wednesday afternoon that he had four signatures and would get his fifth when he arrived here Thursday.

Before coming to the Lyceum Wednesday, which he entered at 9:30, King went to the School of Education building and asked to register. He was told to wait for Registrar Robert B. Ellis.

When Mr. Ellis arrived a few seconds later, he drove King to the Lyceum where he conferred with Mr. Ellis and Mr. Clegg.

Mr. Clegg said the university was through with King after about 15 minutes. He said he knew nothing of the way in which King left and that he had gone to his office as soon as they ended their conversation.

MENTAL TEST SET

Negro Miss. U. Rejected Is Taken to Lunacy Tests

OXFORD, Miss. (UPI)—A Negro sought unsuccessfully Thursday to enroll at the University of Mississippi to study for a Ph.D. When he refused to leave the campus, state police took him to have a mental examination.

Had Clennon King, 38, succeeded, he would have been the first Negro to gain entrance to a white public school in this solid segregationist Deep South state.

King

The Highway Patrol refused to say where King was taken but Sheriff Boyce Bratton immediately asked Chancery Court to issue a petition for a lunacy examination.

Even before he showed up on the campus to bring about an unprecedented situation in Mississippi, King vowed he would not leave until he was admitted or sent to Africa as an "unwanted American."

A controversial figure on both sides of the racial issue, King, who was born and reared in Albany, Ga., holds a Masters degree from Western University and a Bachelor's from Tuskegee Institute. He said only the white university could offer him a course toward a Ph.D in this state.

Public Safety Commissioner Tom Scarborough, in charge of the special state police detail, hinted that King may already have been taken to a mental hospital.

Officials said there was no violence or demonstration but that during the two hours he spent in the university Administration Building King once ran through several rooms shouting "Help! Help! Help!"

Student witnesses said that a group of plainclothes police went into the building and carried King bodily out to their car.

Scarborough said he believed King to be "mentally unbalanced."

University officials refused to say why King was barred from registration.

King first tried to enroll with white summer students at the Education Building and stood in line without challenge. But he was turned away at the registration table and escorted to the Administration Building.

After a brief conference with Assistant Chancellor Hugh A. Clegg inside the heavily guarded building, King apparently sought to remain.

At no time during King's stay was there any demonstration on the campus or in the old university town where Pulitzer Prize novelist William Faulkner lives.

Negro Professor Whisked Off Campus

OXFORD, Miss. (AP)—Highway patrolmen in plain clothes whisked a controversial Negro professor, Clennon King, off the University of Mississippi campus Thursday after he tried to enter the all-white school as a graduate student.

Newsmen saw the green station wagon, which students said carried King off the campus, go by and ran for their car. But the station wagon eluded the would be pursuers.

Hugh Clegg, assistant to Chancellor J. D. Williams, said King declined to leave the administration building voluntarily after a conference.

"The highway patrol took him off the campus," Clegg said.

Plain clothes officers were on guard at both doors of the building where students were due to begin registering for summer classes. Other officers were inside the building and one sat across the street in a radio-equipped car.

No student was permitted to enter as King was taken to the administration building.

A crowd of students gathered outside the building during the more than two hours King was inside.

Newsmen didn't see him leave but students reported he was escorted out of the back door by three white men, apparently officers, and put into the back of the station wagon.

Clegg said King's papers were received, and he was told they would be processed and forwarded to the board of trustees.

Clegg said he didn't know whether King was successful in obtaining the endorsement of five white alumni which state-supported colleges require of applicants.

King had said he had four of the required names and an indication a fifth sponsor would become available to him when he arrived at Oxford.

King is the Negro history professor whose prosegregation newspaper articles set off a student boycott which almost closed Alborn A&M College early in 1957. His contract at that state-supported Negro school was not renewed for the 1958-59 session and King announced his intention to enroll at the University of Mississippi.

There is no integration in Mississippi education, public or private, at any level.

King announced last month he would seek to begin work on a doctor's degree at Mississippi. He ran a quarter-page ad in the Gulfport Herald seeking the five alumni signatures required.

Negro To Test Ole Miss Ban Today

GULFPORT, Miss. (AP)—Negro professor Clennon King said he will try to enroll Thursday in the all-white University of Mississippi.

King told a newsman Wednesday he would arrive at Oxford an hour before the school opens and seek the endorsement of a fifth alumnus.

The state's white colleges require all entrants to have the backing of five alumni. King gained four signatures after running a newspaper ad here. He said he was told he could get the fifth at Oxford.

King is the controversial history professor whose newspaper articles, critical of the National Assn. for Advancement of Colored People, touched off a boycott of Alcron A&M College by students of that state Negro school last year.

WANTS TO GO TO OLE MISS

Clennon King Seen As Lonely Man Who Likes His Publicity

By JOHN HERBERS
United Press International

Clennon King, Negro history professor who is trying to be the first of his race admitted to a white public school in Mississippi, is a lonely man with a wonderful ability to stay in the headlines.

About the time he begins to fade into obscurity he comes forward with some new, dramatic act that cannot be ignored. Today he was scheduled to appear on the University of Mississippi campus to enroll in graduate school.

He has been scored by Negro and white educators alike—to say nothing of the NAACP; one man on the State College Board virtually turns purple with rage when his name is mentioned; a church congregation rejected him as minister and had him thrown in jail for refusing to be fired.

STARTED LAST YEAR

To a reporter who has covered all of his wars, Clennon King now seems obsessed with what he calls a grevious wrong done him at Alcorn A&M College.

It all started in March of 1957 when King wrote a series of newspaper articles highly critical of the NAACP and its school integration tactics. The articles were warmly praised by white segregationists.

But they were a spark in a powder keg at Alcorn and the entire student body walked off demanding he be fired for stirring a controversy. The College Board was barely able to save the school after firing the president, Dr. J. R. Otis, for letting it happen.

King having become a controversial figure, the new president, Dr. J. D. Boyd, was anxious to get rid of him. But to fire him would be submitting to the demand of the students. He was kept on the payroll but was not allowed to teach any classes. All he could do was live among enemies—the school is in the country by itself—and nurse his bitterness.

FIRED BY CHURCH

In the meantime, King was dismissed as pastor of a church in Hazlehurst. But he refused to stay away from the church and the church had him jailed on a charge of trespassing.

Last month, King was finally fired by the state. He moved to Gulfport as pastor of a church there and announced plans to enter the university.

He holds a master's degree from Western Reserve University and a bachelor's from Tuskegee Institute. He wants to work toward his Ph.D.

"If there was a Negro college that offered a Ph.D. and was convenient for me I would go there," King said, "but there isn't."

He pointed out that Negroes are permitted to graduate school at Louisiana State University.

"But I'm Mississippi's problem not Louisiana's," he said.

Negro Is Thrown Out At Ole Miss

Bodily Heave-Ho For Clennon King

By RICHARD F. ROPER

OXFORD, Miss. — (UPI) — Negro educator Clennon King was barred from registering for summer school at the University of Mississippi today and escorted from the campus by the state highway patrol.

After a brief conference with Assistant Chancellor Hugh A. Clegg, King apparently tried to remain in the closely-guarded administration building. But he was carried bodily to a patrol car by highway patrolmen and plainclothesmen hired by the state. He was then driven off the campus.

King, who wants to earn a Ph. D. degree at the all-white institution, was escorted into the building for a conference with Clegg at 9:32 a. m. He did not leave the building until two hours and 15 minutes later.

But Clegg said he talked with King only 10 or 15 minutes. This reporter was watching the front entrance to the building. A crowd of students who were watching the rear said the guards went in, picked up King and carried him to the car.

DESTINATION SECRET

State Public Safety Commissioner Tom Scarbourgh said he "didn't know" where King was being taken.

"Any information will have to come from Clegg," he said.

When a reporter pointed out that King left with officers under Scarbrough's jurisdiction he said, "Well, I guess the officers in whose company he is ought to know."

Speculation was that King was being returned home to Gulfport, more than 300 miles south of here. There also were reports he would be put on a bus for Gulfport at nearby Grenada.

THREATENED TO STAY

He had threatened to stay on the campus until he was admitted or sent to Africa as an "unwanted American." Before being escorted into the conference with Clegg, King was turned down at a registration table at the Education Building, where there were no guards to keep him out.

Clegg would not say whether King would be permanently barred from the school.

"King's papers have been received by the registrar and they will be forwarded to the College Board in Jackson," Clegg said. "All the statements concerning him will be made by the board whenever it decides to do it."

About 50 patrolmen and plainclothesmen had taken positions around the building and at all entrances to the campus before 7 a.m. under the direction of Public Safety Commissioner Tom Scarbrough.

NEEDS RECOMMENDATION

King, now pastor of a church at Gulfport after being fired as a member of the faculty at Alcorn A&M State College, arrived in Oxford at 5:30 a. m. and went immediately to the home of a Negro minister, apparently seeking the name of an Oxford alumnus who would recommend him for admission.

There were no crowds gathered on or near the campus which was pelleted by rain all morning.

Scarbrough said his force was here only to maintain order. "We don't want another Autherine Lucy case here," said Scarbrough, referring to outbreaks of violence at the University of Alabama when a Negro woman enrolled.

The plainclothesmen refused to identify themselves and said only, "We represent the state."

Scarbrough said King "is not going to register." The controversial Negro has said he will appeal to the governor and even to President Eisenhower if his application is rejected, but he said he would not take any court action. If proven "an unwanted American," he said, he would ask to be shipped to Africa.

King, whose newspaper articles criticizing the NAACP stirred a revolt at Alcorn A & M College when he was a professor at the Negro school last year, said he would be on hand to register for graduate school when the university opens.

Mississippi has admitted no Negroes to white public schools on any level. College officials would make no statement on how they plan to handle King but it was broadly hinted his application would not be accepted.

HANDLE AS ROUTINE

"We plan to handle it as routinely as possible," said Hugh Clegg, assistant to the chancellor.

The main obstacle blocking King appears to be the requirement of recommendations from five alumni from the applicant's home county. King, now pastor of a church in Gulfport, said he had four names from Harrison County. He said he would try to get another in Oxford, 300 miles from his home county.

"I think I should be admitted without the full five names," King said Wednesday. "There are no Negro graduates of the university and out-of-state graduate students are permitted to register without any names."

King wrote Registrar Robert B. Ellis that if he is kept from registering "in some form I will appeal immediately to the governor. If he is unavailable or unsympathtic, I will appeal to President Eisenhower. I do not intend to leave the campus voluntarily."

If President Eisenhower takes no action in his behalf, King said, he would "demand" that the state government "immediately return me to Africa from where white Americans took my ancestors against their will, and blot my name from a hopeless citizenship."

Maryland U. Admission Bias Denied

Wilson H. Elkins, president of the University of Maryland, says race, creed and economic position are not among factors considered in screening prospective students.

Elkins made the statement Monday night in reply to charges made earlier in Annapolis by Senator Goodman (D-Balto. Co.).

Goodman said state universities are discriminating against the admission of Jews, Negroes and children of poor parents to their professional schools. He asked the General Assembly to appoint a committee to study such discrimination.

He said the state helps finance several of these colleges and universities, "especially the University of Maryland and Johns Hopkins."

Admission boards of some schools, such as the University of Maryland Medical School, have set up percentage quotas for Jews, Goodman said.

Elkins said if any discrimination is being practiced by admission boards of any of the university's schools, "I am not at all aware of it . . . and it is contrary to university policy."

In Baltimore, Dr. William S. Stone, dean of the university's medical school, said:

"It just isn't so. We would welcome any investigation they want to carry out in that regard."

Suit may be filed against Pembroke

By SAMUEL HOSKINS

MAXTON, N.C. — The Lumbee Indians, who boast that "whites and Indians don't mix with colored," soon may run head-on into another showdown.

According to reliable sources here, a series of suits to end racial segregation in both white and Indian schools of Robeson County soon may be filed in Federal court.

One of the main targets of such suits, when and if filed, will be the state-supported college in the practically All-Indian town of Pembroke, about 12 miles from here.

* * *

OTHER TARGETS would be the 20-odd public schools attended by whites, Indians and Smilings (also Indians) — but from which colored are barred.

Until a few years ago whites also were excluded from Pembroke State College.

A special act of the legislature was required to authorize the board of trustees to admit non-Indians as students.

THE INSTITUTION is a four-year liberal arts school with 343 students, about equally divided between Indians and whites.

It is the only college in the county where there are roughly 30,000 Indians, 20,000 colored and 40,000 whites.

Questioned last Thursday, County Superintendent of Schools B. E. Littlefield of Lumberton denied any knowledge of pending suits.

"I haven't heard a word about it," he declared.

He said he thinks such a suit "would be the last thing that would happen in Robeson County."

* * *

SUCH A SUIT, he said, "would create more trouble than anything you could imagine."

Asked if he meant the Lumbee Indians would forcibly oppose a court order to end racial said:

"Yes, sir, that would be a very dangerous thing. Actually, it would be a pretty bad situation."

The initial suits, it is understood, will be filed in behalf of students in Lumberton and Maxton.

* * *

THE LEGAL action, it is understood, would have the all-out support of ministerial groups of both towns as well as throughout the country, it is reported.

When told the school superintendent predicted trouble if suits are filed, one pastor declared:

"We'll let the law take it course. Public schools should be open to all, for neither the Indians or whites own them."

Earlier this year previously segregated Pfeiffer College, a private institution, changed its policy when Mrs. E. C. Noel of Albermarle, N.C., was enrolled as a student.

* * *

THE POLICY change was accomplished without special action or announcement.

Dr. Lem Stokes, president, said, "Her application was treated simply as the application of any other qualified applicant would be."

Last fall the city schools of Greensboro, N.C., inaugurated a program of "selective integration" by admitting a number of colored students.

The enrollments were executed under the state's student placement law.

HOWEVER, pending in court now is the first test suit of a student's right under the placement law. A hearing is set for May 12.

The complainant is 14-year-old Joseph H. Holt Jr. of Raleigh, who is seeking to enroll in the school nearest his home.

Currently no colored students attend the school.

Negro Pupil Faces 'Lunacy Hearing'

Miami Herald
Miami, Fla.

OXFORD, Miss. —(UPI)— A Negro sought unsuccessfully Thursday to enroll in University of Mississippi to study for a Ph. D. Fri. 6-6-58

When he refused to leave the campus state police took him to have a mental examination.

Had Clennon King, 38, succeeded in his unsponsored move, he would have been the first Negro to gain entrance to a white public school in this solid segregationist Deep South state. P. 2-A

Chancery Clerk J. B. Howell said he drew up a lunacy warrant against King at the request of Lafayette County Sheriff Boyce Bratton. This means King will be examined by two physicians, Howell said, and "if they conclude his mind is a little off, they will send him to Whitfield (State Hospital) for psychiatric examination."

Officers refused to disclose where King was taken after highway patrolmen ejected him bodily from the Ole Miss campus but it was learned later he was in a cell on the top floor of patrol headquarters.

Even before he showed up on the campus to bring about an unprecendented situation in Mississippi, King vowed he would not leave until he was admitted or sent to Africa as an "unwanted American."

A controversial figure on both sides of the racial issue, King holds a masters degree from Western University and a bachelor's from Tuskegee Institute. He said only the white university could offer him a course toward a Ph. D. in this state.

Any statements about his case will be made by the State College Board in Jackson, Assistant Chancellor Hugh A. Clegg said.

He referred to the riots directed against a Negro coed at the University of Alabama two years ago.

Negro fails to register at Ole Miss

OXFORD, Miss., June 5—(AP)—Controversial Negro Professor Clennon King carried his campaign to enter the University of Mississippi to the campus of the all-white school today. He did not gain entry.

A spokesman for the education department, where registration for Summer school is underway, said:

"He showed up here today. He asked if this was where they were registering. He's not here now. He did not register. I don't know any more about it."

King is the history teacher whose newspaper articles last year touched off a student boycott at Alcorn A&M College for Negroes, almost closing the school. The articles were critical of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

The 37-year-old former faculty member at the all-Negro Alcorn A&M (Miss.) College was whisked away by State highway patrolmen yesterday whe nhe tried to enter the summer session at the university.

His whereabouts were secret until late last night, when the Associated Press learned he was being held in a tiny cell on the top floor of the State highway patrol headquarters here.

Reporters talked to him only an hour before the highway patrol threw a cordon of troopers around the building and refused access to Mr. King.

"I don't know what they're going to do," Mr. King told his interviewers. "I would like to get out. I wouldn't bother it any more. I would leave it alone.

State authorities indicated he would be examined by physicians. Chancery Clerk J. B. Howell of Oxford, who filed a lunacy warrant against Mr. King, said, "If they conclude his mind it a little off, they will send him to Whitfield (State Hospital) for psychiatric examination."

NEGRO COMMITTED FOR MENTAL TESTS

Mississippi Holds Man Who Tried to Enter College— Lawyer Is Ejected

P 10 C

JACKSON, Miss., June 6 (UPI)—A Mississippi court ordered a Negro who had tried to enter the State University committed to a state mental hospital today after the state police had held him incommunicado for twenty hours.

Shouting, "They aren't doing me right," Clennon King, the holder of two college degrees, was led away sobbing by plainclothesmen.

Two physicians examined Mr. King, 38 years old, before Chancellor Stokes Robertson Jr. and gave the opinion that he should be committed to the State Mental Hospital at Whitfield for examination.

Mr. Robertson ordered Mr. King committed, but not before ejecting from the courtroom his Negro attorney, Sidney Tharp of Jackson. Mr. Robertson said Mr. Tharp was "interfering with the examination of Clennon King while under the influence of alcohol or goofballs."

King Not Ruled Insane

Mr. King was not ruled insane but was ordered held at the hospital for a thorough examination.

While Mr. King was being examined in another building, Gov. J. P. Coleman said at a news conference at the Capitol that Mr. King would either be confined as a mental case or tried for disturbing the peace and resisting arrest for his conduct at Oxford yesterday.

The highway patrol carried Mr. King bodily from the Oxford campus after he had been rejected as an applicant to study for a dictor's degree. They said he had refused to leave the university administration building.

Mr. King went to the university campus yesterday with the avowed purpose of becoming the first Negro to enter a white school in Mississippi. The Governor said Mr. King had forged recommendations from white alumni on his application.

Negro Is Seized for Lunacy Test In Trying to Enter Mississippi U.

OXFORD, Miss., June 5 (UPI)—A Negro sought unsuccessfully today to enroll at the University of Mississippi for graduate study. When he refused to leave, state policemen carried him off to have a mental examination.

Clennon King, '38 years old, attempted to become the first of his race to gain entrance to a white public school in this Deep South state.

The highway patrol refused to say where he had been taken, but Sheriff Boyce Bratton asked Chancery Court to issue a petition for a lunacy examination. The court clerk said this meant Mr. King would have to go before two doctors.

"If they say he should be sent to Whitfield [the state mental hospital] they would send him down," he said.

Before Mr. King showed up on the campus, he had insisted that he would not leave until he was admitted or sent to Africa as an "unwanted American."

A controversial figure in the racial issue, Mr. King holds a master's degree from Western University and a bachelor's from Tuskegee Institute. He said only the University of Mississippi could offer him a course toward a Ph.D. in this state.

"We don't want another Autherine Lucy case here," Tom Scarborough, Public Safety Commissioner, declared. He referred to riots directed against a Negro co-ed at the University of Alabama two years ago.

Mr. King first tried to enroll with white summer students at the education building, and stood in line without challenge. He was turned away at the registration table and escorted to the administration building.

After a brief conference with a school official inside the heavily guarded building, Mr. King apparently sought to remain.

However, guards went inside picked him up bodily and carried him to a waiting highway patrol car, according to student eyewitnesses. His home is Gulfport, 300 miles south of here.

When Mr. King arrived, he refused to talk to reporters. It was raining and few students were on the campus. Later, during the two hours he was in the administration building, 200 students gathered. There were no demonstrations.

Mr. King's criticism of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in newspaper articles last year led to his discharge as a professor at Alcorn A. & M. Negro College.

The registration rules at the university say an applicant must be recommended by five alumni from his home county. Mr. King, pastor of a church in Gulfport, said earlier that he had four names from Harrison County, and would try to qualify with those if he could not get another sponsor when he arrived here.

U Of Miss Urged To Admit King

NEW YORK — Protesting against reported efforts to Mississippi officials to brand Professor Clennon King as mentally incompetent because he sought admission to the state university at Oxford, Miss., Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, today sent the following telegram to Governor J. P. Coleman:

"Press dispatches quote Mississippi officials as stating that Professor Clennon King will be examined on suspicion of mental incompetence because he applied in person to register for graduate work in the summer school of the University of Mississippi. National Association for advancement of Colored People wishes to enter strongest protest against this procedure. No question was raised as to Professor King's mentality when he advocated segregation and attacked this association and the Supreme Court of the United States in a series of newspaper articles in Mississippi which was syndicated to many southern daily papers. Now that Professor King has sought to further his education at the tax-supported university in his state, an attempt is reportedly being made by state officials to have him declared incompetent. We trust that as chief executive of the state you will not permit this obvious injustice to a citizen who has sought peacably and legally to enjoy a right declared to be his by the Supreme Court of our country. We urge the university to admit him if he still desires to attend. The summary action at the Oxford campus where Professor King was bodily ejected without apparent cause suggests strongly that Mississippi has no confidence in the regulations it has set up to bar Negro students. The American code of fair play would be grossly violated by any effort to attain an official Miss. finding of mental impairment to Professor King's reputation because he challenged segregation."

Negro Seeks Mississippi U. Enrollment

JACKSON, Miss., May 29 (UPI)—Clennon King, former Negro college professor, announced today he will attempt to enroll in the University of Mississippi June 5 despite the fact he does not have the recommendation of five alumni.

He wrote Registrar Robert B. Ellis that "it will be impossible for me to have more than four recommendations from Harrison County alumni" and asked to be admitted on that.

The school requires for admission recommendation of five alumni from the applicant's home county. The requirement was made to keep Negroes from the all-white institution.

Dr. E. R. Jobe, board secretary, said he had no comment on what action the board would take.

King, who is pastor of a church in Gulfport, said regardless of the decision he would try and enroll for Summer school. He is seeking a doctor's degree in history.

King has been a controversial figure since he stirred a student revolt at Alcorn A&M College where he taught history by a series of newspaper articles attacking the NAACP. He later was fired and also was dismissed as pastor of a Methodist Church in Hazlehurst.

King Plans Move On Basis Of Four Recommendations

JACKSON, Miss., May 29. — (UPI) — Clennon King, former Negro college professor, announced Thursday he will attempt to enroll in the University of Mississippi June 5 despite the fact he does not have the recommendation of five alumni.

He wrote registrar Robert B. Ellis "it will be impossible for me to have more than four recommendations from Harrisor County alumni" and asked to be admitted on that.

The school requires for admission recommendation of five alumni from the applicant's home county. The requirement was made to keep Negroes from the all-white institution.

None of Mississippi's public schools has been integrated.

Mr. Ellis said he turned Prof. King's letter over to the college board. Dr. E. R. Jobe, board secretary, said he had no comment on what action the board would take.

Prof. King, who currently is pastor of a church in Gulfport, said regardless of the decision he would try and enroll for summer school. He is seeking a doctor's degree in history. He did not name the four alumni recommendations he said he could obtain.

Prof. King had taken an advertisement in a Gulfport newspaper asking, "Are there five alumni of the University of Mississippi with courage to recommend the undersigned to their university?"

Prof. King has been a controversial figure since he stirred a student revolt at Alcorn A&M College where he taught history by a series of newspaper articles attacking the NAACP. He later was fired and also was dismissed as pastor of a Methodist church in Hazlehurst.

Negro Applicant Carried Bodily From Ole Miss

OXFORD, Miss., June 5 (AP)— Highway patrolmen today bodily ejected a Negro professor who sought to enroll in all-white University of Mississippi.

Public Safety Commissioner Tom Scarbrough expressed belief that 37-year-old Professor Clennon King "is mentally unbalanced" and said this "is to be investigated by the proper authorities."

Scarbrough said in a statement the controversial professor was "escorted to a nearby car" when he refused to leave the administration building where he had sought to register.

Students said the tall, Georgia-born professor was carried bodily to a waiting station wagon which sped away before newsmen could talk to King. Scarbrough declined to say where King was taken.

Scarbrough said he and his patrolmen, some of whom were in plain clothes, were assigned to the Ole Miss campus at the direction of Gov. J. P. Coleman. The governor conferred earlier this week with state college board authorities after King announced his intentions to try to register here.

Scarbrough said that when the conference with Registrar Robert Ellis was over, "I talked with him about leaving peacefully and awaiting the decision of the authorities as to his application.

"He refused to leave the registrar's office. Finally, when it became evident that he had no intention of leaving after his business was concluded, I left the building for legal advice. . . . Upon my return he was running through a suite of rooms in the registrar's office shouting, 'Help! help! help!' although there was no one else with him and no possible chance of anyone harming him.

"In this state of affairs we escorted him to a nearby car and drove him off of the campus. He was not harmed in any way."

King, supporter of a "Back to Africa" movement for American Negroes, is the history professor whose pro-segregation newspaper articles set off a student boycott which almost closed Alcorn A&M College early in 1957. His contract at the state-supported Negro school was not renewed for the 1958-59 session and King then announced plans to enroll at Ole Miss.

UNIVERSITY OF MISSISSIPPI
DISCRIMINATION

Negro Seized At University Is Committed

JACKSON, Miss., June 6 (UPI). A Mississippi court ordered a Negro who tried to enter the state university committed to a state mental hospital today after state police held him incommunicado for 20 hours.

Shouting "they aren't doing me right," Clennon King, 38, holder of two college degrees, was led away sobbing by plain clothesmen.

Two doctors examined King before Chancellor Stokes Robertson Jr., and gave the opinion he should be committed to the state mental hospital at Whitfield for examination.

Robertson ordered King committed, but not before ejecting from the courtroom his Negro attorney, Sidney Tharp of Jackson. Robertson said that Tharp was interfering with the examination of King while "under the influence of alcohol or goofballs."

King was not ruled insane but was ordered held at the hospital for a thorough examination.

Even as King was being examined in another building, Gov. J. P. Coleman held a press conference at the capitol at which he said that state police took King away from the university campus at Oxford for fear of trouble from crowds.

King recently was dismissed from the faculty of a Negro college because of his attacks on the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. He went to the university campus at Oxford yesterday on his own with the avowed purpose of becoming the first Negro to enter a white school in Mississippi.

Mental Test Ordered For Negro Prof

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—A lunacy panel Friday ordered a mental examination for a Negro college professor who sought unsuccessfully to enroll in all-white University of Mississippi.

"They are not doing me right at all," sobbed the 37-year-old Clennon King as he was led away to Mississippi State (mental) Hospital at nearby Whitfield.

Hinds County Chancery Clerk Frank Scott ordered the examination upon recommendation of two physicians who testified King's mental state was in doubt. The hospital must examine the Negro as speedily as possible and report to the clerk.

Gov. J. P. Coleman said if King is insane he will be committed to the hospital for treatment. If he is sane, he will be tried on charges of disturbing the peace and resisting arrest at the university.

Coleman said the former Alcorn A&M (Negro) College history professor was arrested Thursday when he refused to leave the university administration building without registering. He had been told he could not register until his application had been approved —standard college procedure.

Coleman told a news conference, Friday, King's refusal to follow procedure proved "his complete unfitness to become a student in any of the educational institutions supported by the state."

The governor said the Georgia-born professor went berserk when school authorities and state officers sought to persuade him to leave the campus and await a decision on his hopes to enroll as a graduate student.

King was carried bodily to a waiting station wagon and whisked off the campus by patrolmen in plain clothes. Coleman said he was brought to state patrol headquarters because he threatened, if released, to return immediately to the campus.

The professor was held incommunicado in a cell and Coleman and other officers refused to disclose his whereabouts.

But photographer Norm Bersma of the Daily News and The Associated Press succeded in tape-recording an interview with King through the cell door, the news of which resulted in Coleman ordering guards posted around the building.

Coleman said King's whereabouts were kept secret to prevent possible disorder.

In the interview, King said he wanted only to "get out of here. I don't know what they're going to do. I would like to get out. I wouldn't bother it any more. I would leave it alone."

He was referring to his attempt at registering.

Attempt By Negro To Enter Ole Miss Ends In Jail Cell

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Negro Prof. Clennon King earned an isolated jail cell today for his efforts to cross the state's rigid racial lines. He said his attempt to enter the University of Mississippi is ended.

The 37-year-old former faculty member at the all-Negro Alocrn A&M Miss. College was whisked away by state highway patrolmen yesterday when he tried to enter the summer session at the university.

His whereabouts were top secret until late last night. The Associated Press learned he was being held in a tiny cell on the top floor of the state highway patrol headquarter here and held an exclusive tape-recorded interview.

The interview came only an hour before the highway patrol threw a cordon of troopers around the building and refused anyone access to the tall, Georgia-born King.

"I just want to get out of here," King said in the interview tape recorded by Norman Bergsma of the Jackson Daily News.

"I don't know what they're going to do," King told his interviewers. "I would like to get out. I wouldn't bother it anymore. I would leave it alone."

But state authorities may not leave King alone. They indicated he would be examined by physicians. Chancery Clerk J. B. Howell of Oxford, who filed a lunacy warrant aganist King, said, "If they conclude his mind is a little off, they will send him to Whitfield state hospital for psychiatric examination."

King To Face Mental Tests

Protesting Negro Ordered To Whitfield

'NOT DOING ME RIGHT'

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., June 6. — Negro Prof. Clennon King Friday was ordered to Whitfield State Mental Hospital for examination.

The decision was made by two doctors after a hearing before a Chancery Court clerk. Gov. J. P. Coleman declared King went berserk Thursday in seeking entrance to all-white University of Mississippi.

"They are not doing me right at all," the 37-year-old professor sobbed as he was led by plain clothes highway patrolmen from Chancery Court building where the lunacy hearing was held.

Governor Coleman said if the mental examination shows King is sane, he will be tried on charges of disturbing the peace and resisting arrest on the Mississippi campus at Oxford.

Says He's Given Up

Under the law, King will be "examined with all reasonable speed by the director and staff" of the hospital and a report will be made to the chancery clerk.

King told reporters his attempt to break Mississippi's rigid racial bars is over.

Governor Coleman said the former Alcorn A&M College history professor was arrested Thursday morning when he refused to leave the university Administration Building without registering. He had been told he could not register until his application had been approved—standard college procedure.

Governor Coleman told a news conference Friday King's refusal to follow procedure proved "his complete unfitness to become a student in any of the educational institutions supported by the state."

The Governor said the Georgia-born Negro went berserk when Ole Miss authorities and state officers sought to persuade him to leave the campus and await a decision on his hopes to enroll as a graduate student.

Followed By Officers

King was carried bodily to a waiting station wagon and whisked off the campus by patrolmen in plain clothes. Governor Coleman said he was brought to state patrol headquarters because he threatened, if released, to return immediately to the campus.

Governor Coleman said plain clothes officers followed King's cross-country bus from Gulfport to Oxford Thursday. In addition, a plain clothesman was aboard the bus.

"We knew what he was going to do," Governor Coleman said. "He had told it all over the state."

The officers were present "to take care of any unexpected event which might take place."

The Governor stressed throughout the news conference that everything was being done to prevent violation of King's civil rights.

He said a copy of the proceedings would be forwarded to the United States Department of Justice and to interested Federal officers as soon as possible.

Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson, who sat in on the news conference, said there was no intent to make an example of King's case.

King's Lawyer Ejected

"We would have been derelict in our duty if we had not taken steps we took to avert trouble," Mr. Patterson said. "I'm glad we had no trouble."

At King's lunacy hearing, Chancery Judge Stokes Robertson Jr. ejected Sidney Tharp, who identified himself as King's attorney.

Judge Robertson said Tharp was "apparently under the influence of alcohol or goofballs or something like that." He added that Tharp "was interfering with the examination of King by the two physicians."

Under state law covering lunacy hearings, the chancery clerk appoints two physicians, one a member of the county health department, to determine whether the person should be confined at a mental hospital for observation and examination.

Newsmen and spectators were barred from the hearing.

Mental Hearing Set For Negro Asking White College Entrance

Tries To Enter U Of Miss., Clennon King Called 'Crazy'

JACKSON, MISS. (ANP) -- Though Professor Clennon King managed to secure the assistance of four University of Mississippi alumni to vouch for him on his application to enter the all-white school, it came to naught last Thursday.

All the 37-year-old controversial former faculty member of Alcorn A & M College got for his hard work was a jail cell and the prospects of having to submit to a psychiatric examination.

According to King, interviewed in a cell on the top floor of highway patrol headquarters, he was standing in line waiting to register for summer school when he was invited into the administration building for a conference with Registrar Robert Ellis.

CLENNON KING
Applies at University

"Mr. Ellis told me it would be sometime before they could process my application," King said. "Probably not until after the last day of registration."

Thinking the situation was hopeless, he started to leave the room, but was "forced out" another entrance and carried to a waiting car.

"I didn't know what they were going to do," he said. "I would like to get out. I wouldn't bother it any more. I would leave it alone."

When he was taken out, he said he was told, "that if I came back on the campus, I would be arrested."

Tom Scarbrough, public safety commissioner, said King was "escorted to a nearby car' when he refused to leave the building. However, students in the line waiting to register, said King was carried bodily to the car before newsmen could talk to him.

At Oxford, Chancery Clerk J. B. Howell said he had drawn up a lunacy warrant asking King at the request of the county sheriff, who charged the ex-Alcorn professor must have been mentally unbalanced for trying to get into the university.

Thus, King's release awaits the report of psychiatrists. He will have to be examined by two physicians, said Howell, "and if they conclude his mind is a little off, they will send him to Whitfield state hospital "for further psychiatric examination.

Earlier, King had put an ad in the Gulfport Daily Herald asking five of University of Mississippi alumni to back his application to enter the school. The white educational institutions require such endorsements. He reported that four had responded to his request, and that prospects for the fifth one doing so were good. He did not mention their names.

Allen Students Fighting To Enter S.C. University

Five apply thru mail after rebuff

By JOHN H. McCRAY

COLUMBIA, S.C.—With the chant, "Two, four, six, eight; we don't want to integrate" ringing in their ears, five Allen University students filed by mail applications for admission to the University of South Carolina Thursday afternoon.

The five, part of an 11-student group which sought applications forms Wednesday afternoon, had returned about 4:30 p.m. Thursday and offered executed application forms to Dr. W. C. McCall, director of the Examining and Counseling Bureau at USC.

Dr. McCall, obviously prepared for the visit, repeated over and over, "I cannot accept your applications."

* * *

HE STUCK to the answer despite the several brief questions the student group asked. The Allen students, with a polite chorus, "Thank you very much," departed, the entire procedure requiring no more than about two minutes.

In another minute, they were off the USC campus. Half a block out, but passing several USC campus buildings, they smiled when a male group of white students stuck their heads out of a third floor window and let go with:

"Two, four, six, eight: we don't want to integrate."

The group rushed to an automobile and indicated that they were hurrying to the post office to dispatch the applications. entered the campus about 45 minutes before, through the same gate.

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.
1-25-58

AS WE walked past the same dormitory, one USC male student said, apparently to another student, or others in his room:

"Look, here comes the NAACP."

After the Allen students left, a USC student asked us:

"What's going on? Are they planning to come to school here?"

We didn't know, saying "I'm just a reporter."

By now, a dozen or more had filed out of the dormitory, more out of curiosity than anything else.

We had joined three white newsmen in front of McCutcheon Hall where the students were to have gone. We stood about and chatted, two of us with cameras, and this fact had attracted some attention.

* * *

WE (REPORTERS) decided to take certain advantage points about the nearby entrances to the campus since none knew by what route the Allen students would come.

Mine was at Sumter St. As my wife and I walked toward the entrance we passed two men wearing the uniforms of U.S. Air Force sergeants. Both smiled and gave a gracious "Good afternoon."

It sort of came by surprise as our mind was on getting to our positions.

We also passed several students, three of whom spoke politely.

At the Sumter St. gate we talked with a colored grounds keeper as we had done with another at a Pendleton St. entrance.

* * *

AFTER SOME 20 minutes of waiting, we walked back to the group of reporters, which was re-gathering in front of McCutcheon.

Had we been given false telephone tips? Some of us had been there close to an hour and nobody had shown up.

The wait was especially rough on me as I had hardly pulled into home from a long, continuous drive from Baltimore and hadn't had time to sit down or clean up when my call came in.

But just as we were about to decide the thing was off, or we had gotten bum steers, the first of the Allen students came walking, laughing together and smiling "thank yous" to white students saluting them, from around the corner.

THEIR APPEARANCE at that precise moment caused both of us with cameras to miss a couple of good shots.

In less than two minutes they had entered and left the building. On their way out, several of the white students asked "Who are you folk?" They got the answer, "Just some more kids, that's all."

Outside the campus, one of the Allen coeds said, referring to the USC students:

"Did you notice how nice they were? And they meant it; they weren't being funny."

Far more USC students swarmed out of nearby dormitories when the five Allen students appeared on the USC campus about 4:30 p.m. Thursday.

AN ALLEN student said afterwards she overheard "Here come the N—rs again," but aside from that there wasn't any remark among those peering out of windows or coming out to the sidewalk in front of their buildings.

It was a mild, bright, comfortable winter afternoon and against the neatly cropped green USC campus and glistening cement sidewalk, the Allen students were a majestic, pretty picture making their way upwards from the Sumter St. entrance.

Slightly in front was the tall ell built, handsome Allen U. football player, whose strides and demeanor were in themselves meaningful and full of authority and respect.

• • •

ON BOTH visits it was obvious that the Allen students planned and stuck to this, to waste no time. On the second trip, they left by the same Pendleton St. entrance the larger number had used for entering and departing the day before.

As they left Dr. W. C. McCall's office Wednesday, they were joined by two USC male students who asked:

"Wouldn't you like for us to show you around our campus. We'd be glad to do it."

The Allen students replied graciously, "No thank you." One of the Allen girls added, graciously, "We'll see it some other time."

A few moments later, on the street again, and about half a block from the Pendleton St. entrance, the Allen group smiled slightly when USC males yelled from a third story window, perhaps four or five of them:

"Two, four, six, eight. We don't want to integrate."

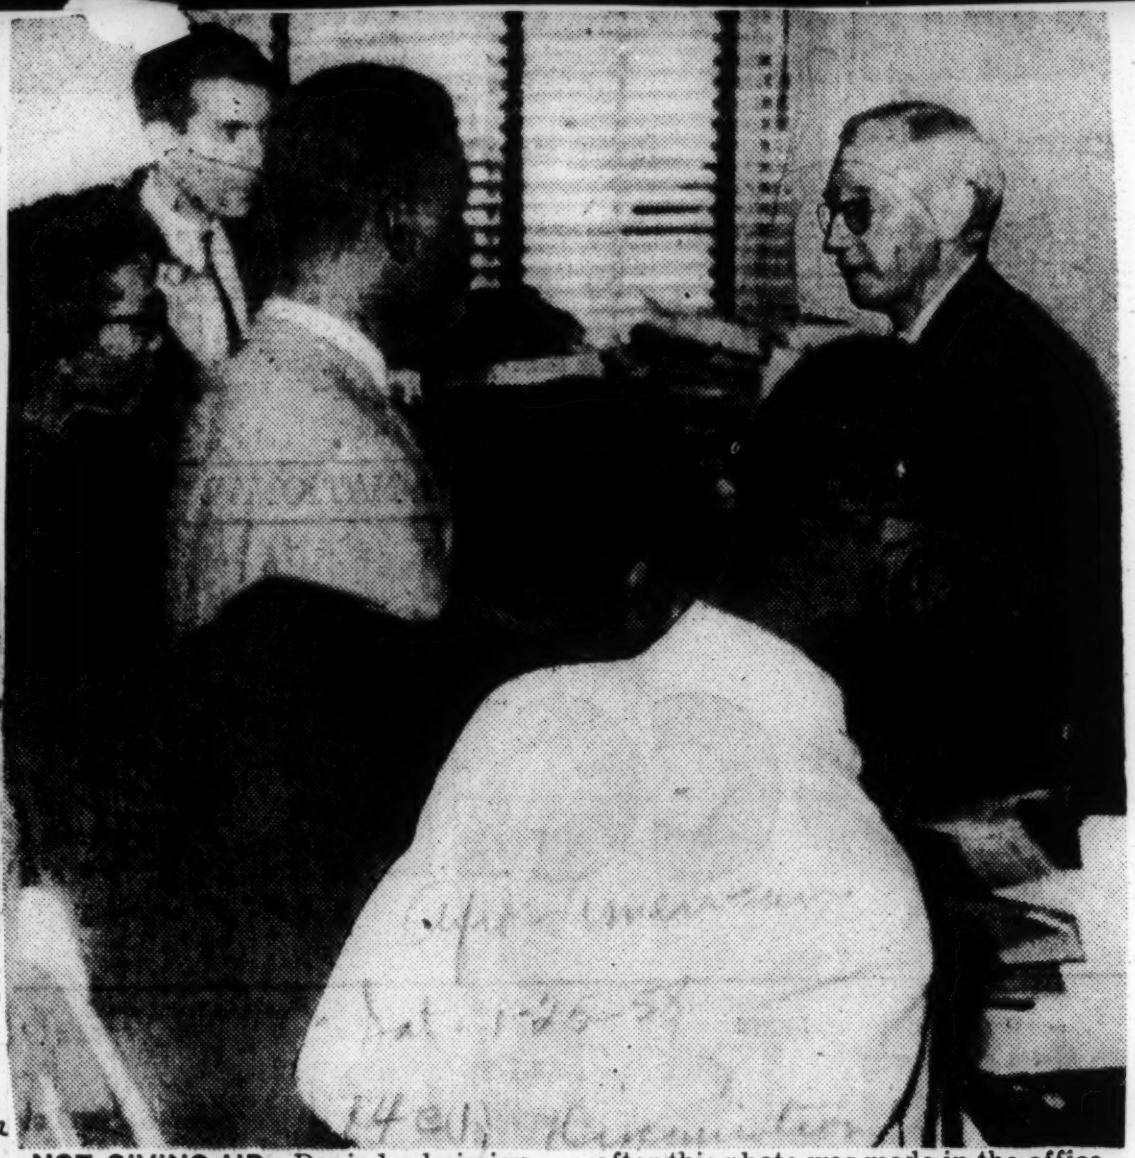
Allen students given welcome

COLUMBIA, S.C. — "Welcome to our campus," several white male students said to the 11 Allen University students as the latter group walked onto the campus from a Pendleton St. entrance at about 2 p.m. Wednesday.

The white students leaned out of dormitory windows; some of them smiled and waved. All appeared in good humor. Others on the campus looked at the 11 curiously and went their way.

USC Rejects Four Negroes

COLUMBIA, S.C., Jan. 22 (AP)—Four Negro students from nearby Benedict College today tried without success to obtain admission forms at the all-white University of South Carolina.



NOT GIVING UP—Denied admission to the University of South Carolina because of their color, these Allen University seniors announced shortly after this photo was made in the office of Dr. W. C. McCall, director of examining and counseling, they planned to take their case to the Federal court.

It was the third time in a week the State University campus has been visited by Negro students who said they want to enroll.

State law requires segregation at the University. Another South Carolina statute would close the University and the State College for Negroes at Orangeburg if a court should order the admission of a Negro student at USC.

The four male students withheld their names. One said they were told by W. C. McCall, director of the University Examination and Counseling Bureau, "There is nothing I can say to you."

They left without obtaining applications for entrance examinations, a preliminary step to enrollment.

One of the Negro group said McCall asked, "What's the matter, are you having any trouble at Benedict?"

The reply was, "No, but I think they have better facilities here than at any private college. I am a taxpayer and a lifelong resident and I want to enroll."

USC Turns Away Negro Applicants

News & Courier, Charleston S.C. P.P.
Fri 1-17-58

COLUMBIA, Jan. 16 (AP) — Five Allen University Negro students seeking to file applications for entrance examinations at the all-white University of South Carolina were turned away today.

Three of the five were female students. Application blanks, which the students said they had filled out, were handed Dr. W. C. McCall, director of the Examination and Counselling Bureau, late this afternoon.

The forms were actually placed before him by only three of the students.

McCALL REPLIES

McCall told each of them in turn "The response is that I cannot accept your application."

After he had repeated this statement three times, the group quietly left, thanking him on the way out.

They took the application blanks with them as they left and declined to say what their next move might be.

A small group of university students that had gathered outside McCall's office looked on silently as the Negroes left the campus.

The five were among 11 students from the Columbia Negro school who sought application blanks from McCall yesterday.

McCall said he told them "according to the order under which we operate, I cannot examine you and there is no purpose in supplying you with applications."

GOT FORMS

Two of the students told reporters later they obtained forms "elsewhere."

They said that "upon rejection of our applications for entrance examinations (part of the admission procedure) for the spring semester, we will take legal steps."

Several of the original 11 said they had decided "individually" to seek admission to USC because the State Board of Education last September withdrew recognition of Allen teacher graduates.

The move would make it impossible for them to teach in public schools in the state.

REASON FOR ACTION

The board's action was taken because of the presence of three men on the Allen faculty. Names of two of the three, Prof. Forest Wiggins and John G. Rideout, appear in files of the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Rideout and the third faculty member, Prof. Edwin Hoffman, are white.

Allen officials have told all three their contracts will not be renewed May 31. They have refused requests to resign before then with pay.

Action for immediate dismissal has not been taken.

ANOTHER FACTOR

The students said another "contributing factor" behind their attempt to enroll at the university is their argument that "Negroes have been ostracized by being kept out of the university and our cups are just about to run over."

South Carolina law would close any state-supported school or college at the moment a Negro student is admitted by court order.

Simultaneously, the State College at Orangeburg for Negroes would be closed.

Several hours after the Allen students left the USC campus yesterday, a Negro was hung in effigy in front of one of the dormitories.

Allen officials reported receiving several threats from anonymous telephone callers. One of the callers, they said, warned that he would "blow up the place" if student action persisted.

Late last night, several crosses were burned on the USC practice field near Russell House.

The Allen students would not permit reporters to use their names, maintaining that "identifying us at this time would be of no value."

They did say that a majority of the 11 are education majors Four others, they added, are ministers in the African Methodist Episcopal Church, which operates Allen. The ministers are taking additional college training

S. C. Negroes Barred

COLUMBIA, Jan. 16 (AP) — Five Allen University Negro students seeking to file applications for entrance examinations at the all-white University of South Carolina were turned away today.

Three of the five were female students. Application blanks, which the students said they had filled out, were handed Dr. W. C. McCall, director of the Examination and Counseling Bureau, late this afternoon.

The forms were actually placed before him by only three of the students.

McCall told each of them in turn: "The response is that I cannot accept your application."

After he had repeated this statement three times, the group quietly left, thanking him on the way out.

All are students at Allen University, a Negro College in Columbia supported by the African Methodist Episcopal Church.

Three Allen faculty members are at the center of the controversy. They are Forest Wiggins, a Negro, and John G. Rideout and Edwin Hoffman, both white. The names of Wiggins and Rideout appear in files of the House Unamerican Activities Committee.

Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr. outlined critical views on the Allen situation to the Legislature this week. He called for an investigation of communistic activity in South Carolina.

The three Allen professors issued a statement last night saying Gov. Timmerman "well knows" that the "real need here in South Carolina is achievement of American democracy for all the State's citizens rather than a committee to investigate so-called communistic activities."

3 From Allen Seek Entry To USC By Mail

COLUMBIA, Jan. 17 (AP) — The University of South Carolina today received by mail the applications of three Allen University Negro students for entrance examinations.

Five Negro students had been turned away yesterday when they sought to file applications on the university campus at the office of Dr. W. C. McCall, director of the university examination and counseling bureau.

Dr. McCall confirmed that three applications from Negroes had arrived by mail today. He declined to comment on how the applications would be handled.

Normally, the university would mail the applicant an admission ticket and a map of the campus, along with the date and place of the entrance exam.

Dr. McCall said he could not identify the Negroes by name. The Negro students themselves have refused to identify themselves to newsmen.

2 more students file USC blanks

COLUMBIA, S. C. — Two Benedict College students filed applications by registered mail Wednesday for entrance exam forms to the University of South Carolina.

Their names withheld, the two being among four Benedict students who applied in person for application forms at USC on Jan. 22.

Dr. W. C. McCall, director of the USC Examining and Counseling Bureau, had refused the requests as he had done a week before when 11 Allen students sought application forms, and a third time when five other Allen students came back the next day.

A SPOKESMAN for the Allen-Benedict students, who are working together on the USC issue, told the AFRO:

1. Additional applications are to be filed by other Benedict students and, immediately, by three persons in a Piedmont section of the state, all seeking to enroll in summer school classes at USC.

2. Students during the week had applied formally for the legal services of an attorney.

3. Several high school pupils have written for application forms and that many had received these by mail.

THE STUDENT spokesman said that anyone desiring enrollment at USC must first apply for an application form to take an entrance examination.

He added that this is all that Allen and Benedict students had sought thus far.

Dr. McCall returned the applications and $10 deposits of three Allenites who filed applications by mail after he had refused to accept them over the counter.

MEA SPEAKER SAYS

South Emphasizing Special Education

Daily News P.18

By H. S. BONNEY, JR.

The rapidly rising income and educational standards in the South are underlying factors for advances in the field of special education, a Southern Regional Educational Board representative told members of the MEA's Special education division here yesterday.

William C. Greer of Atlanta, consultant in special education, said that the [illegible] of the South has helped its people to focus their thoughts on education, including special training for the most mentally defective child to the most gifted.

He declared that three powerful forces in the South accounted for the fact that Southern income was rising much faster than that of the naion as a whole. He named them as climate, water supply and recreational facilities.

"We must base the special education of our children on the potential of the South," he declared.

Speaking at Hotel Edwards, Geer said that Mississippi was the only state in the country with plans for a research program dealing with special education.

He urged those interested in different fields of special education to discuss their programs with one another, thus helping to make it a state program rather than a "specialist" program.

Geer also quoted Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida as predicting the average income of the South in 1975 would equal or surpass the average income of the nation.

W. R. Burris, supervisor of special education, Miss. Dept. of Educasion, earlier said that 1254 pupils were presently enrolled in 58 special classes set up in the state.

Chairman of the special education group is Robert Scott of Tupelo.

Educator Unit Urges Higher Teacher Plain

Constitution P.3B

By WILLIAM O. SMITH

A group of Southeastern educators meeting here have called for higher teacher qualifications and more stringent certification requirements.

Sun. 5-11-58

The educators also said a program of counseling students to take the courses suited for them should be stressed equally with the planning of the curricula.

The suggestions were among several made by work groups during the Southern Region conference on quality education of the National Citizens Council for Better Schools.

A report on the work group findings was given the 300 delegates at Saturday's final session at the Biltmore Hotel by Douglas MacRae, assistant superintendent of Fulton County Schools.

Atlanta Ga

MR. MACRAE SAID suggestions from the educators representing 12 Southeastern states also included:

1. Students should be taught more adequately the faculty of analysis and critical thinking.

2. The educational opportunities for all children must not be abandoned for the European concept of education for a selected few.

3. More emphasis should be placed on the American way of life because "the ideas and ideals of this land, for the battle to win men's minds the world over is more ideological than it is nuclear."

4. Administration reorganization and consolidation of many small high schools is needed. Mr. MacRae said the educators felt it's difficult to teach classes in such subjects as physics and trigonometry in a school where there is a senior class of only 15 students.

5. A greater program of scholarships for top scholastic students.

6. Improvements in the pay of teachers and decreases in teaching loads in many instances.

* * *

THE EDUCATORS also heard a school superintendent from Virginia say that Russia's launching of the first space satellite does not prove that the educational system of this country is all wrong.

H. I. Willett, superintendent of Richmond Public Schools, said Friday night that if the United States has fallen behind in the missile race, the reason might be one of social and economic decision.

He said many of our scientists have been more concerned with production of new automobiles, washing machines, television and similar items while Russians have concentrated on missiles.

Following the conference, a group of interested Georgians met to organize a Georgia Citizens Committee for Better Schools.

OFFICERS and board of directors for the group have been named but this was the first meeting. John Henry Woodall, of Woodland, president, said the interest of those attending the meeting will determine the program of the committee.

Mr. Woodall, who is also chairman of the Southern group and one of two Georgians on the National Council, said the organization has a goal "to stimulate interest in education and not conflict with constitutional authority."

The other Georgian serving on the national council, A. L. Feldman, is vice president of the state committee.

Schools' Basic Need Money, SREB Told

Panel Agrees Most Education Problems Hinge On Finances

P.1 14e(2)

By NORMAN SPELL
News And Courier Staff Writer

Higher education's basic problems can be solved by the application of only one factor—money.

This was the considered opinion of a panel of Southern educators appearing yesterday as witnesses before the Southern Regional Education Board's legislative committee during SREB's seventh annual legislative work conference.

Witnesses included Charles Dobbins of the American Council on Education; Dr. John K. Folger, associate director of SREB research; Dr. Andrew D. Holt, vice president of the University of Tennessee; Dr. John Dale Russell, director of the Center for Study and Development of Higher Education, New York University; and Dr. James R. Wattenbarger, director of the Community College Council, Florida State Dept. of Education.

Charleston Sat. 8-23-58

The panel of legislators investigating the South's needs in higher education and sources of financial support was headed by Virginia General Assembly delegate Paul W. Manns. Members included South Carolina State Rep. Preston S. Marchant of Greenville, SREB conference clerk; Rep. Joseph N. Bailey Jr. of Mississippi; Texas House Speaker Waggoner Carr; North Carolina State Sen. W. Lunsford Crew and Rep. George Ehinger of Delaware. South Carolina Lt. Gov.-nominate Burnet R. Maybanks is conference speaker and a panelist.

GROWTH CITED

Testimony covered the "explosive growth" of the student population in the SREB's 16-member Southern states, tuition fees, scholarships, housing and classroom use, faculty pay, research projects and grants, private gifts to colleges and the always-touchy problem of federal aid to education in the form of scholarships and research subsidies.

Dobbins made it clear that he would consider it a "disaster" if Southern schools placed any more of their educational finance burden on the federal government. Dobbins recommended to the panel and the 175 delegates to the conference attending the hearing that schools — especially state-supported Southern schools — "continue to avoid" additional federal aid.

Responding to questions on the current federal move to appropriate large sums for college scholarships, Dobbins noted that the scholarships bill's prospects are "not looking very bright at this moment." He continued that the individual states — using either federal or state scholarship funds — should handle the granting of such scholarships so that the student could choose the college and course he wanted. Dobbins said that the college scholarship programs of various schools in the country are "so restricted as to be useless" by forcing the applicant to meet an assortment of conditions that usually have nothing to do with his abiiity to succeed in college work.

NEED FOR COURSES

Holt, commenting on the facilities available to students in most Southern schools, said most students forced to look elsewhere for special training "won't come back." He referred specifically to a group who sought training in nuclear engineering at the University of Tennessee but had to go to California to find the courses. He stressed the need for more courses in the modern sciences and research projects in science that would attract inquisitive students.

Rutledge Courier

The college teacher's salary came in for study yesterday as Holt noted that University of Tennessee faculty members received an average of $3,000 a year in 1945 and $5,600 this year. "He (the average teacher) is just as far behind as he ever was," observed Holt, comparing the teacher's situation with "a truck driver."

Seeking sources of additional money for faculty pay and other improvements, Ehinger asked Holt if classrooms couldn't be used to better advantage, turning money for new construction toward more pressing needs. Holt responded that the present classroom-use system did represent a "tremendous loss."

14e(2)

YEAR-ROUND SCHOOL?

Crew asked if colleges couldn't be run on a year-round basis, to which Holt answered "they (the students) just won't attend summer school at this time."

Referring to the new generation of highly-skilled nuclear scientists, Russell said he felt "they hold the future in the palms of their hands."

He said he did not feet it right that such a group, having paid for its own education, should be allowed to feel that it "can use it as they (the members of the group) please."

"When you give a man a free education, you make your collections from him the rest of his life," said Russell in answer to questions on free tuition. He explained that the service an educated man rendered society would repay his debt to the state for his education.

LOOKING FOR MONEY

Summing up the discussion, Folger stated simply that the money for an effective system, if one is to exist, has to come from "somewhere."

The current SREB conference will seek to find that source.

The meetings recessed after lunch yesterday at campaign headquarters in the Francis Marion Hotel and delegates spent the afternoon touring the city and harbor areas.

Today's program — ending the conference — will feature comments by Holt on "Issues in Regard to the Legislator and ine Financing of Higher Education." After Holt's 9:30 a.m. talk, small groups will attempt to work out individual local problems.

Action on conference resolutions is scheduled for the afternoon, and Gov. James P. Coleman of Mississippi will make the final conference address prior to sine die adjournment at 2 p.m.

SREB Official Speaks To Land Grant Group

ATLANTA, Sept. 29.—(UPI)—The Southern Association of Land Grant Colleges and State Universities was told Monday that steps should be taken to "improve the climate of public opinion regarding higher education."

Dr. Robert C. Anderson, director of the Southern Regional Education Board, said his group was anxious to co-operate with the 23-member schools to take such steps.

Dr. Anderson outlined to the delegates at the association's annual meeting some of the steps that SREB has taken in the 10 years to promote regional higher education.

He noted also that a study might be made on the interrelations between the university and the economy of the region. He predicted that concentrated research and training might step up the South's economic rise "by as much as one or two generations."

W.Va. Governor To Preside Here

Gov. Cecil Underwood of West Virginia will preside over dedication ceremonies of the Southern Regional Education Board's new headquarters building in Atlanta Monday.

Ceremonies officially opening the new two-story $250,000 building at 130 Sixth St., NW, will begin at 10:30 a.m.

Gov. Griffin and Dr. Robert C. Anderson, SREB director, will also take part in the dedication program.

A 15-minute color film, narrated by U.S. Sen. Hill (D-Ala), entitled, "A Longer Shadow," will also be presented.

Southern Regional Board's new home to be dedicated

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 12—Leaders in government and education from throughout the South will dedicate the new Southern Regional Education Board office building tomorrow. SREB chairman, Gov. Cecil H. Underwood of West Virginia, will preside.

The $250,000 two-story structure will serve as permanent home for the nation's pioneer agency in the field of regional education. Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia and Dr. Robert C. Anderson, SREB director, will also take part in the 10:30 Monday morning ceremonies.

A premiere of the new SREB film, "A Longer Shadow," narrated by U. S. Sen. Lister Hill of Alabama, will be presented. The 15-minute color film on the history and programs of the board is being released this week to film libraries in each of SREB's 16-member states.

CONSTRUCTION of a permanent home in Atlanta for the SREB was made possible under a plan developed by Gov. Griffin. He proposed the state of Georgia allocate $250,000 to the Georgia Board of Regents for construction of a building to be leased to SREB at $10,000 a year. After 25 years it will be occupied rent-free, but remains the property of the state of Georgia.

The board plans to publish a history of the organization's 10-year accomplishments and to sponsor a national conference on regional education during the coming year. The New England Board of Higher Education and the Western Interstate Commission on Higher Education, both regional agencies patterned after the SREB, would participate in the national conference.

THE SREB was established by the Southern Regional Education Compact which was signed by the governors of 14 Southern states in 1948 and has been ratified by the legislatures of 16 states.

As it begins its tenth year, the Board has an annual operating budget of about $750,000. More than $320,000 is provided by private foundations and other organizations for specific projects. The additional funds are provided by legislative appropriations from Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia and West Virginia.

COSSAR GETS CITATION

Southern Regional Education Board Commends State Man

Governor Luther Hodges of North Carolina, chairman of the Southern Regional Education Board, issued a special citation to Rep. George Payne Cossar, of Charleston, Tallahatchie county, at the 7th annual Legislative Work Conference held at Charleston, S. C.

The citation resulted from outstanding work on the board and as a member of the Legislative Advisory Committee of the 16 Southern states.

Mr. Cossar accepted the citation in person, having been invited to the meeting by the delegation from South Carolina and the board. He had not been named a delegate and was not re-appointed by Governor J. P. Coleman to the board.

Mr. Cossar was appointed a member of the original steering committee in 1952 to formulate plans for Legislative Work conferences for the 16 Southern States. Four members comprised this original committee. As a result of planning of this committee the first Legislative work conference was held at Nashville, Tenn., in September 1952. The Conference was an important advance in Southern Education since the Legislators were assisting the Southern Regional Education Board to mature an instrument for aiding states and institutions to spend their funds more effectively in forwarding higher education.

LONG SERVICE

Since 1952 Mr. Cossar has served on the Legislative Advisory Committee planning each annual Legislative Work Conference, including the 7th annual meeting at Charleston, South Carolina.

On June 30, 1954, Governor Hugh White appointed Cossar as a member of the Southern Regional Education Board. Members of the Board representing Mississipp were Chancellor J. D. Williams President Ben Hilbun and the Governor. The Chairman of the Board is a Southern Governor and the Vice Chairman usually a legislator or educator.

At the Fourth Annual Work Conference held at Biloxi, in 1955 Mr. Cossar was elected Speaker of the House to preside over the meeting of the legislators of 16 States.

In 1956 members of the Southern Regional Education Board comprising 16 Governors of the Southern States and three other members from each state, named Mr. Cossar to serve as Vice-Chairman of the Board. Governor Roy Collins of Florida served as Chairman of the Board. This was a distinct honor as only one legislator from the entire 16 Southern States could serve as Vice Chairman.

VICE CHAIRMAN

Mr. Cossar, in 1957, was again elected as Vice Chairman of the Board respresenting the legislatures of the 16 Southern States. At no time during the existence of the Board has a legislator been reeclcted as Vice Chairman

The record as established by Mr. Cossar, was given special emphasis by Representative Pete Marchant of South Carolina, host to the conference, who stated that the record of George Payne Cossar has been the most outstanding work done by any legislator in the South during the existence of the Board.

Governor Hodges' letter of citation to Mr. Cossar follows:

"It is my pleasure, on behalf of the Southern Regional Education Board, to present to you a Certificate of appreciation for your service to higher education in the region, as a Board member, and as a legislative leader.

"This certificate is awarded in acknowledgment of your contribution to higher education in the region during the period 1952-1958. During those years you served, officially, as a member of the steering committee for the First Annual Legislative Work Conference on Southern Regional Education, and as a member, either of the Steering Committee, or of the Legislative Advisory Council, in each succeeding year.

"You are one of a very few legislators who have participated in every one of the annual Legislative Work Conferences, and your enthusiastic and helpful leadership in those Conferences has been a real asset to the Board and to your colleagues.

"In 1954 you were appointed to membership on the Southern Regional Education Board, and later you were instrumental in gaining acceptance for an amendment to the Southern Regional Education Compact specifying that each state would have one legislative member on the Board. You served well, for two terms, as the Board's Vice-Chairman, and in that capacity gained the respect, not only of your fellow legislative members, but also of the educator members and the Governors.

"Mississippi has, as you know, been one of the big recipients of the advantages of regional cooperation in higher education. Mississippi's full participation in the program of the Regional Compact has, for the past several years, been insured by your role of leadership in your own state legislature. It has been, I am told, largely through your efforts that your state stands so high in the amount of money appropriated annually for programs and activities under the Regional Compact.

"One of the strengths of the Southern Regional Education Program is in the area of increased understanding among governmental and educational leadership in our region. Your contribution has done much to advance that understanding

"It is our hope that you will continue to work closely with the Board, and to give your support and effort to further its program. We appreciate what you have done in the past, and we look forward to further close association with you in the future."

SREB To Hold Financial Talks At 3-Day Event

CHARLESTON, S. C., Aug. 20. —(UPI)—Legislators and educators from 16 Southern states gather here Thursday for a three-day conference on the financial affairs of higher education in the South.

South Carolina Lieutenant Governor-nominee Burnet R. Maybank Jr. of Greenville will welcome the group and will act as presiding officer.

The State of South Carolina will be host to the delegates at a dinner Thursday night at which time Dr. Harold Clark, educational economist from Columbia University, will speak.

An open hearing on financing higher education will take place Friday.

Mississippi Gov. James P. Coleman will address the conference at its closing session Saturday. Governor Coleman's speech has been represented as a "major talk" by political circles at Jackson, Miss.

Dr. Robert C. Anderson of Atlanta, Ga., is director of SREB, an agency of 16 Southern states whose purpose is to aid the states in making better use of their resources in higher education through sharing expensive graduate and professional programs.

SREB Council Meeting Set In Atlanta

ATLANTA, Ga. (Special) — State legislators from 16 Southern states will gather here Friday for a two-day meeting of the Legislative Advisory Council of the Southern Regional Education Board.

U. S. Rep. Carl Elliott of Alabama will be the featured speaker at a dinner Friday night. Elliott will discuss the National Defense Education Bill passed at the last session of Congress. He was co-author of the legislation.

Part of the agenda for the meeting includes reports on plans for SREB's 10th anniversary celebration, a proposed study of the relationship of higher education and economic development of the region, and a review of the SREB mental health program.

On Saturday the legislators will visit the new SREB building now nearing completion in Atlanta and attend the Georgia Tech-Clemson football game.

Presiding over the meeting will be Council Chairman Paul W. Manns, a member of the Virginia House of Delegates.

SREB is an agency of the Southern states, operating under an interstate compact. Its purpose is to aid the states in improving the quality of their college and university programs through interstate cooperation.

SREB Office Dedication Is Set Tomorrow

Southern Leaders To Be On Hand For Atlanta Ceremonies

ATLANTA — Leaders in government and education from throughout the South will gather in Atlanta tomorrow for formal dedication ceremonies of the new Southern Regional Education Board office building.

SREB Chairman, Gov. Cecil H. Underwood of West Virginia, will preside over ceremonies at the modern $250,000 two-story structure which will serve as permanent home for the nation's pioneer agency in the field of regional education. Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia and Dr. Robert C. Anderson, SREB director, will also take part in the 10:30 Monday morning ceremonies.

A premiere showing of the new SREB film, "A Longer Shadow," narrated by U.S. Sen. Lister Hill of Alabama, will also be presented. The 15-minute color film on the history and programs of the Board is being released this week to film libraries in each of SREB's 16-member states.

MEETINGS PLANNED

Board members, the SREB Legislative Advisory Council, college and university presidents and other friends of the Board have been invited to the building dedication. The Board's Finance and Executive Committees will also hold meetings during the day.

Construction of a permanent home in Atlanta for the SREB was made possible under a plan developed by Gov. Griffin. The Georgia governor proposed that the state of Georgia allocate $250,000 to the Georgia Board of Regents for construction of a building to be leased to SREB at $10,000 a year. After 25 years it will be occupied rent-free, but remains the property of the state of Georgia.

In announcing the building dedication and release of the film, SREB Director Anderson said several other activities are planned to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the formation of the regional agency.

TO PUBLISH HISTORY

He said the Board plans to publish a history of the organization's 10-year accomplishments and to sponsor a national conference on regional education during the coming year. The New England Board of Higher Education and the Western Interstate Commission on Higher Education, both regional agencies patterned after the SREB, would participate in the national conference.

In releasing 10th anniversary plans, Dr. Anderson also called for continued "inter-institutional planning and program development within and across state lines" to help solve some of the South's educational problems.

He said that through education and research the South could speed the day when it would become "the richest section of the nation." Dr. Anderson added: "If we can join with government and industry in a major effort to develop and utilize the resources of this region, then the story of higher education in the South will be one of the greatest success stories of all times."

ESTABLISHED IN 1948

The SREB was established by the Southern Regional Education Compact which was signed by the governors of 14 Southern states in 1948 and has been ratified by the legislatures of 16 states.

As it begins its 10th year, the Board has an annual operating budget of about $750,000. More than $320,000 is provided by private foundations and other organizations for specific projects. The additional funds are provided by legislative appropriations from the states of Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia and West Virginia.

In reviewing SREB's programs over the past decade, Dr. Anderson pointed out that one of the first programs established was the student contract arrangement.

In 1957-59 alone 900 students attended schools outside their resident state under the contract program at a total cost to the states of less than $2,000,000. "Thousands of Southern young people have taken part in this program which enables a state to train needed persons in certain fields not provided by the state's institutions of higher learning," he added.

$90,000 GRANT

The states soon began work with the SREB and institutions in joint planning of educational programs and in encouraging studies of higher education, both in general and in specific fields such as forestry and nursing education.

The board is entering its third year of work in mental health training and research and is currently administering a two-year grant of $90,000 from the National Institute of Mental Health.

Its research unit is conducting studies on higher education under a five-year grant of $450,000 from the Carnegie Corp. Most of these funds are being spent on studies done directly by the universities or other agencies in cooperation with the SREB.

As it celebrates its 10th anniversary, the SREB is now active in more than 30 academic fields which are of special significance to the development of the South, Dr. Anderson pointed out. In addition to specific programs, the Board also serves as an advisory consultant to the 16 Southern states in development of new programs and studies of systems of higher education within the state.

The grant was one of six totalling $47,535 recently awarded through funds contributed to the annual Easter Seal campaign.

ILLITERACY END AIM OF PARLEY

World Center to Be Goal of Educators

By DON M'LEOD

MEMPHIS (AP)—The ambitious task of teaching nearly half the world's population to read will be considered here this wek in a unique conference on literacy.

About 3000 leaders in education, religion, law, government and the television and motion picture industries have been invited to attend the sessions Friday and Saturday.

One of the prime goals of the conference will be to set up an international literacy center here where educators from various parts of the world can attend courses and learn to teach by the mediums of television and movies.

PIONEER IN TV USE

Dr. Frank Laubach, 73, of New York city, a pioneer in the use of television as a means of teaching adult illiterates, will keynote the meeting. He estimates that there are 10 million illiterates in the United States and over one billion in the free world.

Inspiration for this new attack on an age-old problem came from the success of WKNO, Memphis' educational TV station, in teaching illiterates their ABC's.

In the past two years Dr. Laubach has taught some 2000 adult illiterates in the Memphis area to read through a special series of televised lessons.

Teaching people this essential skill is nothing new to Dr. Laubach, a former Congregational missionary. He figures that since he started his work in 1931 he and his associates have taught 100 million adults to read in 267 languages and dialects in 94 countries.

PICTURE TECHNIQUE

The secret is a teaching technique which he has developed, making use of picture-word-syllable literacy charts.

These charts help student's associate a letter with a picture. From there the letter is connected with a particular sound. Once the sounds are learned, they're put together into words and stories.

The stories teach more than just reading. They're all pointed to give the student valuable information. For instance, how to raise better crops, methods of sanitation, and the many advantages of learning to read.

Dr. Laubach has found that others become envious of his pupil's newly acquired knowledge and thus want to learn to read, too. The simplicity of the method makes it possible for a newly taught literate to teach others in an "each one teach one" plan.

Despite the effectiveness of this technique, Dr. Laubach figures that population growth is keeping ahead of him. The WKNO television experiment was to try to find a way of speeding up the process.

Dr. Laubach thinks he has found the answer in TV.

"Television and film can meet the massive challenge," he said.

White Library Bars 5 Negro Collegians

LAKELAND, Fla., Dec. 30 (AP) — Five Negroes, all college students home for the holidays, were refused yesterday when they attempted to use the facilities of the white public library.

The Negroes complained that the Negro library branch "doesn't have the books we need."

"We're not trying to make trouble," one of them told a librarian who asked them to leave. "We just have to have some books for information to write essays and term papers."

The students took several books down from the shelves but left the library when they were told they could not check the books out.

The five were Frances Mullins, a student at Shaw University, Raleigh, N. C.; Nathan Gradey, West Virginia State College; George Cooper, Howard University, Washington, D. C.; and Erma Jackson and Glorida Mathis, Gibbs Junior College, St. Petersburg, Fla.

THE REV. WILLIE LEE BUFFINGTON, (AUGUSTA, GA.)
A WHITE MAN WHO BUILT LIBRARIES FOR NEGRO CHILDREN IN THE SOUTH

Honor White Aider of Negroes

A white man who built libraries for Negro children in the South today received the 10th annual Lane Bryant Award for exceptional volunteer services.

The $1000 ward was presented to the Rev. Willie Lee Buffington of Augusta, Ga., at a luncheon in the Plaza Hotel.

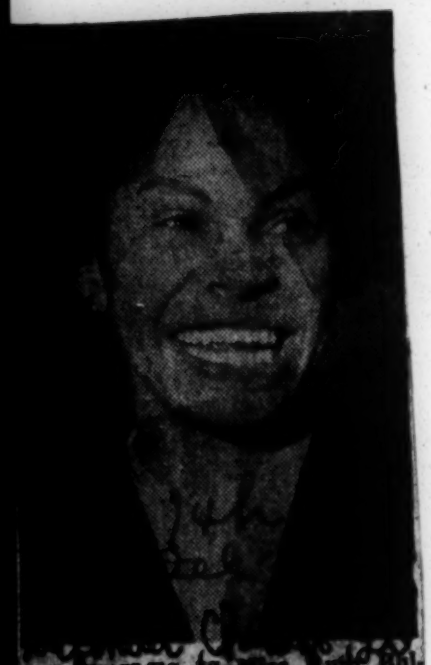
A second $1000 award was given to the Clarksburg, W. Va., Non-Partisan Assn. "for its role in ridding the community of political corruption."

The awards were presented by Raphael Malson, Lane Bryant president.

The Rev. Mr. Buffington, 50, described himself as "just a poor white" who worked his way through school as a trashman.

He said the trash was always full of scraps of reading material, "and I thought of all the books that were just so much waste and trash, lying around in homes all over America."

So in 1931, the Rev. Mr. Buffington founded his first "Faith Cabin Library." Book donations since have enabled him to open nearly 100 such libraries throughout the South.



ALL SMILES IS Miss Lucy Bullock of Atlanta, Ga., who paused briefly in Chicago enroute to Detroit where she works as a reference librarian. The literary-minded Miss Bullock has done considerable writing on her own, has worked in New York with the United Negro college fund, and at Dillard university in the research department. She also has been the recipient of scholarship to an English workshop at the Fisk university summer school.

National Library Week Set To Arouse Interest

Sun 3-16-58

Montgomery Ala

National Library Week, which begins today, has issued a challenge to Montgomerians through its slogan, "Wake Up And Read."

Sponsored by the American Library Assn. and the National Book Committee, this week is intended to stimulate renewed interest and re-evaluation of public libraries and the services they offer.

Throughout the week, recognition of the importance of books and reading in contemporary life will be observed on a national, statewide and local level.

The Montgomery Public Library which is now 58 years old, is the third largest in the state and one of the oldest. Its dignified Carnegie building on the corner o Perry and Adams streets has long been a landmark to citizens of Montgomery.

More than 15,000 borrowers now use the library, and its bookmobile serves children in the city elementary schools. The library also has a branch for its colored patrons.

Plans for two new buildings—a library-museum at Lawrence-High-McDonough streets, and a branch library on Cleveland, as provided in the 1956 bond campaign — are now going forward.

Suit Is Planned Against Library

Will Request Equal Use Of Facilities By Negroes

A suit to force Memphis Public Library to grant equal use of all library facilities to Negroes will be filed in Federal Court here, H. T. Lockhard, attorney, said yesterday.

The Negro attorney said the court action will be brought in behalf of his client, Jesse Turner, cashier of Tri-State Bank of Memphis.

The MPL Board of Trustees announced three weeks ago that its present segregation policy will be continued in the Memphis libraries. The trustees said Negroes will be permitted use of the enlarged reference and research facilities at Cossitt Library on Front, now being remodeled. Negroes also can get books at the Vance Avenue Branch at 531 Vance and from the Bookmobile.

"It may be definitely stated at this time that a Federal Court suit will be initiated by Mr. Turner challenging the Memphis Public Library's stand against granting equal rights to Negro citizens in being issued library cards," Mr. Lockard said. "I can not say when the suit is to be filed due to press of other legal matters and my planned absence from the city."

Origin of the proposed Federal Court suit was refusal of a library card to Mr. Turner and his family at the main library last June by order of Librarian Jesse Cunningham. Court action was later threatened by Mr. Lockard unless library rights were granted to his client.

The MPL announced continuance of segregation after it received petitions against segregation in the libraries here signed by some of the faculty members of Memphis State University, University of Tennessee and Southwestern.

Memphis Negroes Plan Suit Against City's Libraries

MEMPHIS, — (ANP) — H. T. Lockhard, a Negro attorney, plans to file a suit in federal court to force Memphis public libraries to grant equal use of all library facilities to Negroes.

The attorney said the action would be brought in behalf of his client, Jesse Turner. The dispute between Turner and the library board of trustees arose out of the refusal of a library card to Turner and his family at the main library last June.

The board announced three weeks ago that its present policy of segregation would be continued in Memphis and public libraries. The announcement came after a petition against segregation signed by local college faculty members was received.

Top Courier Columnist Heads UNCF

NEW YORK—A top Courier columnist, Benjamin E. Mays, was chosen last week to give leadership to the United Negro College Fund, a movement which resulted from consultations between the late Ira F. Lewis and Dr. Frederick D. Patterson, then president of Tuskegee Institute.

Dr. Patterson Mr. Lewis

At that time, Mr. Lewis was president and general manager of the Courier and Dr. Patterson was a columnist for the Courier. The two men discussed the idea in Pittsburgh and Dr. Patterson went to work on it, bringing it to life.

Thus, when Dr. Mays was chosen as president of the Fund last week, he maintained a sort of tradition of cooperation and leadership between the Courier and the College Fund. Dr. Patterson remains as chairman of the board.

Dr. Mays was the first person to coin the expression that "11 o'clock Sunday morning is the most segregated hour in the United States."

Chicago Cleric Sparks Negro College Fund Drive At Fisk Univ.

NASHVILLE — (ANP) — "The Challenge of Acceptance" was laid eloquently at the feet of the Negro Tuesday night by Dr. William J. Faulkner who keynoted a United Negro College Fund rally in the Fisk University gymnasium.

Former Dean of the Chapel at Fisk, Dr. Faulkner labeled the term "integration" as "trite" and challenged American Negroes to use education and personal contact as the paths to total acceptance.

The pastor of the Congressional church of Park Manor in Chicago pulled the covers off the history of race relations in America and traced the Negro's rise through eras during which he was, in turn, despised, tolerated and accepted — "accepted by law if not by custom."

"From 1620 to 1863 the Negro, as a slave, was despised," Dr. Faulkner said. "He was tolerated from 1863 until 1954. With the historic Supreme Court decision in 1954, the Negro moved into the phase of acceptance.

Keynoting the meeting which launched the 1958 UNCF drive in Nashville, Dr. Faulkner urged his audience to support the College Fund. "I challenge you not to depend on government to give us all of our education. If we are to be free, we must pay for that freedom. We must help our private colleges."

The public meeting, which drew some 650 persons to the Fisk gymnasium, featured music by the famous Fisk Jubilee Singers, the Fisk Choir and the Pearl High school Symphonic Band.

Dr. Stephen J. Wright, president of Fisk, stated: "With the help of the College Fund, we can wipe out our pressing financial problems and expand both in quality and in physical plant."

Chicago Pastor Speaks At Fisk UNC Fund Rally

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — "The Challenge of Acceptance" was laid eloquently at the feet of the Negro last week by Dr. William J. Faulkner who keynoted a United Negro College Fund rally in the Fisk university gymnasium.

Former Dean of the Chapel at Fisk, Dr. Faulkner labeled the term, "integration", as "trite" and challenged American Negro to use education and personal contact as the paths to total acceptance.

The pastor of the Congregational church of Park Manor in Chicago pulled the covers off the history of race relations in America and traced the Negro's rise through eras during which he was, in turn, despised, tolerated and accepted—"accepted by law if not by custom."

"From 1620 to 1863 the Negro, as a slave, was despised," Dr. Faulkner said. "He was tolerated from 1863 until 1954. With the historic Supreme Court decision in 1954, the Negro moved into the phase of acceptance.

"How long it will take us to reach full acceptance depends heavily on the Negro himself. One of the surest ways is to help our young people receive true education of the mind, the hand and the heart."

Dr. Faulkner advised the Negro people to expand their personal contact in an effort to bring about greater understanding among people of varying backgrounds.

He said: "I challenge you not o depend on government to give us all of our education. If we are to be free, we must pay for that freedom.

FOR THE NEGRO COLLEGES

(FROM THE NEW YORK TIMES)

All private colleges need money. The needs of the United Negro colleges are no different from those of other colleges—they are simply more acute.

Most Negro families are less able to pay the cost of higher education than other families. Thirty-two of the thirty-three United Negro Colleges are in the South. The vast majority of Negroes still live in this region. Thus, in general, these schools make higher education available to young Negro men and women where they live.

The United Negro Colleges must take inadequately prepared students and, in four years, bring them to an academic level commensurate with that of students who were not so handicapped by their early schooling. The Negro colleges alone, in the South, have integrated faculties. They alone provide a campus meeting place for interracial gatherings where men of goodwill can and do work out mutual problems.

A contribution to the United Negro College Fund, Inc., is not a gift to charity. It is an investment—and a sound one—in the future. In its annual drive for contributions, April through June, the fund is seeking $2,250,000, or $250,000 more than last year. There are 24,000 young people in the fund's colleges today. They must complete their educations now, without waiting for social readjustments. Generous gifts will make it certain that the United Negro Colleges will continue to discharge with honor their pressing obligations.

5 College Choirs Slate Broadcasts

NEW YORK—The choirs of five member colleges of the United Negro College Fund will be heard over the American Broadcasting Network during August, W. J. Trent, Jr., Fund executive director, has announced. The choirs represent UNCF member colleges in Tennessee, Louisiana, Georgia and Mississippi.

Knoxville College, Knoxville, Tenn., will open the month's radio programs Aug. 3rd. Newell C. Fitzpatrick is the choral director.

XAVIER UNIVERSITY'S choir, led by James Yestadt, will be heard on the Aug. 10 broadcast. Xavier Univ. is in New Orleans.

Morehouse college of Atlanta will present its all-male chorus over the radio network Aug. 17. Wendell Whalum is the director.

• • •

FISK UNIVERSITY'S choir is scheduled for the Aug. 24 ABC broadcast. Fisk is located in Nashville, Tenn.

Tougaloo Southern Christian college, of Tougaloo, Miss., will be on the air Aug. 31, under the baton of Mrs. Sara Booker Turner.

NOW IN ITS eighth consecutive year, the weekly Negro college choir series originates in New York City on the ABC network, 10:30 to 10:55 Sunday mornings. Local radio listings should be checked for broadcast times in the various regions of the country.

The college choir series is rebroadcast by the Armed Forces Radio and Television Service and heard by GIs throughout the world.

UNCF Financial Support Is A Must

The United Negro College Fund drive campaign officially opens this month with the goal being two and a quarter million dollars. Rising costs for the member school's operation, coupled with the 33 colleges on the UNCF roster make it mandatory that the goal be set at the current figure—the highest ever.

As in the past, the Louisiana Weekly heartily supports the UNCF drive, and strongly urges everyone to make as large and as frequent contributions as are humanly possible. We feel that perhaps more than ever before there is need for the college trained Negro. With the rapidly changing social scene, due to sweeping legal decisions, more and better opportunities can be met squarely by our trained students, hence the need for your support of the UNCF.

Until integration becomes a fact by custom as well as law, and even after, the member colleges of UNCF are very vital to the progress of the Negro population. Because of the economic conditions in the South, member colleges of UNCF offer training to thousands of Negroes who would in most cases not be able to afford to attend educational institutions in other sections of the country.

Besides being vital to the progress of the Negro, UNCF member schools are also vital to the progress of the country. More and more college trained persons are being sought every year. With this ever increasing demand, member schools must be ready to educate our students, with training they couldn't possibly get elsewhere.

In addition it should be pointed out that though Negro Colleges were "forced" into existence and have been segregated, they have never been segregating institutions. UNCF colleges, with integrated faculties, are in the vanguard of the fight against segregation, the reason for which they had to be originated. Further, these colleges are in most cases providing the only meeting places for interracial gathering, so necessary to understanding between the races.

For more than 100 years, the UNCF colleges have educated the large majority of the Negroes currently holding leadership positions. The leadership shown by UNCF students is playing a significant role in the progress of the Negro population. These colleges, today, continue to educate the majority of Negro doctors, lawyers, nurses, journalists, ministers, businessmen, technicians and teachers. Further progress without UNFC progress would be virtually impossible.

Like the larger schools, UNCF colleges are faced with rising operational costs. Unlike the larger schools, however, UNCF colleges cannot raise their fees over a minimum, for with the raising of fees, higher education would be out of the reach of most students.

Book purchases, laboratory equipment, repairs, renovations and the like cost UNCF colleges virtually the same as other larger schools. Yet while the larger schols can raise fees because they have wealthier students, UNCF colleges cannot, lest they deprive many of education.

UNCF colleges must "bid" for the finest teachers, so necessary, to adequately training students, while other fields offer more lucrative positions to the person trained to teach. Regardless of how dedicated the teacher, security for himself and his family must be considered. If salaries are not raised, good teachers cannot be secured or retained.

How can the UNCF colleges meet the needs of increasing operational costs, raising salaries of instructors and expansion without raising fees out of the reach of students? They must rely on help from elsewhere because they do not receive state aid. The most efficient help is from the UNCF, the organization founded for the primary purpose of improving opportunities for higher education for Negro youth-especially of the South.

Aid is given by the UNCF to member colleges. Where does the UNCF get the finances that it gives to member colleges? From the people that contribute to the annual campaign drive. The money given by citizens is in turn given to member schools to defray expenses.

You are strongly urged to contribute actively to the UNCF fund raising campaign. The United Negro Colleges must have your support now. Remember, a contribution is not merely a gift to charity, it is an investment in the future.

A Genuinely Worthy Cause

WITH a $2,250,000 goal, the fifteenth annual United Negro College Fund campaign on behalf of its thirty-three member colleges has just gotten underway. The JOURNAL AND GUIDE believes, without qualification, that no more worthy cause comes before the public than this cooperative effort by these independent, accredited colleges. It is not only a duty and obligation of each of us to give, it is a privilege and a rare opportunity.

The colleges are located where 73 percent of all college-age Negroes live. Literature on the campaign points out pertinently that most of the students in the UNCF institutions "would not be able to get a first-class education elsewhere. For 90 percent of these young men and women live in states where the doors to most other colleges are closed to them."

In Virginia three of the four privately operated institutions of higher learning have earned coveted membership in the national organization from which they realize a substantial portion of their funds for current operations. These colleges are Hampton, Virginia Union, and Saint Paul's. In adjoining North Carolina there are six UNCF members—Barber-Scotia, Bennett, Johnson C. Smith, Livingstone, St. Augustine's, and Shaw. The others, each also worthy of fullest support, are located in Georgia, South Carolina, Florida, Texas, Louisiana, Tennessee, Pennsylvania, Arkansas, Alabama, and Mississippi.

A spokesman for the United Negro College Fund says: "At no time in our history has the demand for more, and better educational facilities been greater. This is especially true where Negro colleges are concerned.

"Eighty percent of the students attending UNCF schools come from southern areas. Many are able to attend only because of the lower fees made possible by contributions to the Fund, and through strictest economy by the schools themselves.

"While it is true that these schools have had to operate under extremely difficult conditions, they have produced many of our well-known Negro leaders.

"Today UNCF colleges are facing the challenge of integration Though they necessarily have been segregated in the past, they have never been segregating institutions; and there are now no racial or religious restrictions to admission to any of them."

It is the earnest and sincere wish of this newspaper that every person who reads this editorial will pause and consider his duty and opportunity. Formal campaigns are being conducted in 120 cities and towns throughout the country, including the communities where member colleges are located. Give as generously as you are able to, through one of the local or area committees, or directly to the UNCF headquarters, 22 East 54th Street, New York 22, N. Y.

In subsequent issues of the JOURNAL AND GUIDE will go into further detail about the College Fund and the great urgency for supporting it wholeheartedly.

Celebrities Tape Pleas For Negro College Fund

NEW YORK CITY. — (ANP) — Eight stars of the entertainment world have recorded radio appeals for the United Negro College Fund's 15th annual nation wide campaign, according to W. J. Trent Jr., Fund executive director.

"Steve Allen, Harry Belafonte, Nat King Cole, Lena Horne, Kim Hunter, Robert Mohtgomery, Pat O'Brien and George Shearing have all taken time out from their busy schedules to tell radio audiences throughout the country about the work of the College Fund," Trent said.

The modern jazz pianist from Britain, George Shearing; veteran movie star Pat O'Brien; and dramatic actress Kim Hunter recorded their College Fund spots between New York engagements.

Television's Steve Allen and producer Robert Montgomery made their recordings for radio on the sets of their own shows.

Announcements of the College Fund's annual campaigns were carried in the Advertising Council's March — April Radio and TV Bulletins. With Stanley C. Hope, president of Esso Standard Oil Company, as national campaign chairman, the UNCF's 1958 appeal for $2,250,000 will be conducted by voluntary workers in 120 communities across the country.

Negro College Fund Receives Citation For Valuable Award

NEW YORK, May 16 — The United Negro College Fund has received a citation from the Lane Bryant Annual Awards in recognition of outstanding community service for 1957, W. J. Trent, jr., Fund executive director, announced here today.

"The College Fund is also under consideration for one of Lane Bryant's annual awards of $1,000 to be presented Nov. 13 at the Hotel Plaza in New York City," Mr. Trent said.

A UNCF alumna, Dr. Virginia S. Nyabongo, a graduate of Bennett College, Greensboro, N. C., submited the name of the College Fund for the award. Dr. Nyabongo is director of student and personnel guidance at Tennessee Agricultural and Industrial State University in Nashville. Tennessee State University is tax-supported and not a member of the Fund.

The Lane Bryant Annual Awards of $1,000 to an individual and $1,000 to a group were established in 1948 to encourage voluntary participation in efforts that benefit American home and community life. The firm believes that any individual or group whose non-remunerative efforts have contributed significantly to the strength of the community has added to thesecurity and welfare of humanity.

All nominations for the awards are screened by the Bureau of Applied Social Research at Columbia University under the supervision of Dr. Robert K. Merton.

An Awards Committee, composed of prominent citizens whose interests are focused on furthering community progress, then reviews all nominees for the awards. The final choice of the winners and the selection of the "honorable mentions" rests entirey on the discretion of this committee.

The 1958 Awards Committee includes Joseph N. Welch, senior partner, Hale and Dorr; William E. Stevenson, president, Oberlin College; Frank Stanton, president Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.; Mrs. Arthur Hays Sulzberger, wife of the publisher of The New York Times; and Jacqueline Cochran, president, Jacqueline Cochran, Inc.

The first of America's "education ghosts," the United Negro College Fund set the pattern for collective fund raising for groups of privately supported instiutions of learning. Through a single, annual appeal, the Fund raises approximately 10 per cent of the operating costs of its 33 independent, accredited, member colleges and universities.

Now conducting its 15th annual campaign, the College Fund seeks a goal of $2,250,000 in 1958.

14i 1958 UNITED NEGRO COLLEGE FUND

Dr. Mays Is Elected College Fund Chief

NEW YORK — Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, was elected president of the United Negro College Fund at the organization's annual meeting held here Tuesday.

DR. B. E. MAYS

He succeeds Dr. F. D. Patterson, founder of the College Fund, who has served as president since the fund-raising agency was chartered in 1944.

Dr. Mays was among the small group of college presidents who met in 1943, at the invitation of Dr. Patterson, to consider a new approach to college financing. They organized the College Fund, a pioneer venture in cooperative fund raising for institutions of higher learning. Dr. Mays has served as College Fund vice president since 1949.

LEADING CLERGYMAN

One of America's leading clergymen, Dr. Mays is a former vice president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. Prior to assuming the presidency of Morehouse College for Men in 1940, he served as dean of the Howard University School of Religion in Washington, D. C.

In 1950, Dr. Mays was named "Alumnus of the Year" of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, where he received his master's degree in 1925 and his Ph.D. in 1935.

A Kent Fellow of the National Council on Religion in Higher Education, Dr. Mays has received honorary degrees from eight educational institutions. He initiated the Henry B. Wright lecture series at Yale in 1952.

DR. PATTERSON

Dr. Patterson, who is president of the Phelps-Stokes Fund, New York City, and a former president of Tuskegee Institute, will continue to serve the College Fund as chairman of the executive committee and vice chairman of the Board of Directors. Thomas A. Morgan, retired chairman of the Sperry Corporation, was re-elected chairman of the UNCF Board.

In his annual report, W. J. Trent, Jr., UNCF executive director, credited the College Fund with setting two significant American patterns. It was the first of the country's education chests, and initiated the solicitation of unrestricted corporate support for colleges and universities.

"Today, there are 38 cooperative fund-raising organizations in the field of higher education, and corporations are now giving substantial support to American education," Mr. Trent stated.

"From 1944 through 1957, corporations, foundations, business firms, unions, church groups, social organizations and individuals have contributed $17,925,000 to UNCF's annual appeals to help meet the current operating expenses of the member colleges. The 1958 nationwide appeal is now in progress.

"In addition to the sums contributed for current operations, the UNCF raised $17,750,000, between 1951 and 1957, for capital expenditures for the member colleges," Mr. Trent said.

Funds raised for yearly operating expenses are used by the member colleges to strengthen their academic programs and provide scholarship aid to deserving students. Capital funds provided money for new buildings and necessary repairs.

The presidents of UNCF's 33 member schools and 19 prominent laymen, representing various geographical sections of the country, serve on the College Fund's Board of Directors. Their 1958 annual meeting, held in the Park Sheraton Hotel, was preceded by a fund-raising institute, October 6.

The luncheon session of the institute was addressed by David M. Church, executive director of the American Association of Fund-Raising Counsel. A reception, honoring the college president, followed the afternoon sessions.

Campaigning in 120 cities and towns throughout the country, the 1958 UNCP appeal seeks $2,250,000, 10 per cent of the current expenses of the Fund's 33 independent, accredited member colleges and universities.

Dr. Patterson felt the office should be rotated. Under a rule set at yesterday's meeting a president is now elected to a one year term and limited to two re-elections.

Funds raised by the organization are used by thirty-three member schools to strengthen academic programs and provide scholarships and for buildings and repairs. The fund seeks $2,250,000 for 1958.

Is Too Much Play Making Jack Dull?

High Schools Held Too Easy

Educator, Here for Negro Fund, Cites 'Remedial' Role of Colleges

Colleges must do "a lot of remedial work" because "what we call 'progressive education' makes for too much play and not enough work in high schools," the president of an all-Negro college said here yesterday.

Dr. John Henry Lewis, president of Morris Brown College, Atlanta, is here to aid the fund drive of the United Negro College Fund, which will open Saturday.

Lewis said college freshmen are not fully prepared because they are given too much freedom in choosing high-school courses. There is not enough emphasis on mathematics and the sciences in elementary and high schools, "but we should not overemphasize them, either," Lewis said.

He taught mathematics at Morris Brown a four-year liberal-arts Methodist college, after his graduation in 1908. Lewis holds graduate degrees in sociology from Yale University and the University of Chicago.

In the field of languages, Lewis said teachers and pupils "are not prepared as well as they ought to be. Languages should be taught as early as possible and they ought to be emphasized more on all education levels."

Also Headed Morris Brown From 1920 to 1930

Lewis, 72, was president of Morris Brown from 1920 to 1930. Then he went to California as a Methodist minister, was principal of The Negro high school at Little Rock, and was dean of Payne Methodist Seminary at Wilberforce, Ohio, before starting his second term as Morris Brown president seven years ago.

When he was principal at Little Rock, the junior- and senior-high school students were combined in one school and numbered about 2,000. Later the schools were separated, and the senior high school is "one of the best in the country," Lewis said.

Morris Brown is one of six Negro colleges in Atlanta. The fund seeks to raise $2,250,000 nationally to provide 10 per cent of the yearly operating costs of its 33 privately supported, accredited colleges and universities. In Louisville and Jefferson County the goal is $15,000.

All but One of Such Schools Are In South

All but one of the independent Negro institutions are in the South, where 80 per cent, or about 10,000,000, of the Negro population lives, Lewis said. The combined student bodies of the member colleges number about 25,000.

Lewis, a native of "the woods way down from Atlanta," Americus, Ga., will speak at a Frontiers luncheon at noon today at the Yellow Dining Room, 426 S. Sixth.

Dr. L. H. Foster, president of Tuskegee Institute, will speak at the drive's kickoff luncheon at 1 p.m. Saturday at the Chestnut Street Y.M.C.A. Hector W. Bohnert, vice-presiden tof Bankers Bond Company, is chairman of the drive here.

The citation noted ABC's 'seven years of regular weekly network broadcasts of the choirs of UNCF schools, thus bringing the accomplishments and needs of these colleges to the attention of the American public; the cooperation of ABC officials and staff that has insured the success of these programs over the years; and the genuine concern of the network for the public interest."

The weekly radio series originates in New York City and is broadcast over the ABC network 10:30 to 10:55 Sunday mornings. It is heard over WABC, New York, Sundays 12:35 to 1:00 P.M. Check local radio listings for broadcast time in your area.

U. S. Steel Aids 40 Colleges

NEW YORK — Forty of the country's liberal arts colleges, the student bodies of which are prediminantly Negro, will share in an educational grant of two million dollars announced by the United States Steel Foundation. The allocation is a part of the foundation's 1958 aid-to-education program, in which 655 colleges, medical schools, engineering institutes and universities will participate.

An overall grant of $33,000 was made by the foundation to the United Negro College Fund, which represents 33 private colleges. In addition, seven private schools, not members of the fund, will receive $1,000 each. These latter are: Allen University, Columbia, S. C.; Claflin College, Orangeburg, S. C.; Florida Normal and Industrial, St. Augustine; Jarvis Christian, Hawkes, Tex.; Miles, Birmingham, Ala.; Rust, Holly Springs, Miss., and Stillman, Tuscaloose, Ala.

THE FOUNDATION'S grant to the United Negro College Fund is for current operational use by the member schools. It is wholly apart from a capital grant of $100,000 made to the fund by the U.S. Steel Foundation three years ago.

In announcing the foundation's aid to education program, Roger M. Blough, chairman of its board of trustees, said:

"For the tasks ahead, we shall need both our great public and our private institutions; and since the public universities have substantial regular sources of income to cover many of their needs, providing support for the leading private universities becomes, in these times, an urgent concern."

As regards the foundation's grant to the United Negro College Fund, rules of the latter organization prescribe that such funds may be used to increase the quality of instruction and to broaden the general impact of the member schools. Such funds may not, however, be used for the erection of buildings, since aid toward that end is visioned from the multi-million dollar capital fund now being secured.

1958 COLLEGE FUND ALLOCATIONS $861.779

NEW YORK, — The United Negro College Fund contributed $326,250 to its 33 member colleges and universities today, according to W. J. Trent, Jr., Fund executive director.

The allocation is the second distribution of money during 1958. It brings the total amount received this year by the participating colleges to $861,779.

Stanley C. Hope, president of Esso Standard Oil Co., and 1958 national campaign chairman, reports the fund-raising appeal for the colleges running ahead of last year.

CHAIRMEN OPTIMISTIC

"Volunteer chairmen in our campaign communities, including those hardest hit by the recession, are optimistic," Mr. Hope said.

"Thirty-two of the UNCF's 33 colleges are located in the South. They make higher education available to young Negro men and women where the majority of them live. Reports from our campaign areas indicate that thoughtful Americans throughout the country are convinced of the continuing need for these independent, accredited colleges."

The 1958 campaign, to raise 10 per cent of the operating costs of the 33 UNCF colleges, began in April and will continue until Dec. 31.

"Active campaigning will be stepped up again in the fall in the 120 cities and towns where organized UNCF appeals are conducted," Mr. Hope said. "These include the communities where the Fund's 33 member colleges are located."

Dr. W. J. Trent Speaks To Patterson Branch YM

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C. — William J. Trent, Jr., Executive Director of the United Negro College Fund, spoke at the 33rd annual dinner meeting of the Patterson Avenue Branch YMCA here recently.

In his address he challenged his audience to stop sitting around trying to conform. He dared them to get excited about the world in which we live. "How long are we going to wait before we get real excited about helping America to save its own faith and democracy?" he asked.

EVERYTIME a Negro says to America,, "you cannot abridge our rights" he is helping to save his country.

"This is not a northern problem or a southern problem. It is not a white problem or a colored problem. It is a problem for all of America to work out and solve.

• • •

"WE CANNOT SAY the change will come too fast because things happen only when we get excited".

Hampton Haith, Chairman of the Committee of Management and toastmaster, introduced Mr. Trent.

HE ALSO REPORTED that the Patterson "Y" had a good year of progress with a membership of 1,947 men and boys, with an attendance of 82,079 at 3,718 "Y" activities in 1957. The first year of operation of the new swimming pool had added much to the program.

Rev. S. W. Hylton, chairman of the nominating committee, reported the election results. The following men were re-elected to the Committee of Management for a three year term: Hampton Haith, E. E. Hill, C. I. Sawyer, S. L. Hamlin, and Haywood Dunlap. Roland Hayes and Rev. J. N. Patterson were newly elected members.

Negro College Group Opens Fund Drive

The United Negro College Fund has opened its 15th annual spring drive for funds and this year the goal is $2.25 million, $250,000 more than last year.

The drive will continue through June and the goal has been increased to meet mounting operating costs and because of the addition of two colleges to UNCF membership. The 33 United Negro Colleges, all but one of which are in the South, have an enrollment of 24,000.

F. D. Patterson, president of the UNCF, said today the colleges depend on the fund for about 10 percent of their combined operating costs. He said the plight of Negro colleges is no different than others; they all need money. And the position of the Negro colleges, he said, is even more difficult because "most Negro families are far less able to pay the cost of higher education than other families."

Mr. Patterson said a contribution to the UNCF is not just a gift to charity.

"The UNCF colleges," he said, "are vital not only to the progress of the Negro people, but to the progress of the country. These schools prove that integration can be a two-way street. Their doors are now open to ALL qualified students. With more college-trained people needed each year, the UNCF colleges stand ready to educate their share of the nation's youth."

33 College Presidents Given Royal Treatment

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—Four days of luncheons, business meetings, dinners, public appearances and tours for 33 presidents of colleges with predominantly Negro enrollments came to an end here Monday, March 17. It was the first time in the history of the United Negro College group that all presidents assembled in one city.

Dr. Newsom Says Negro Is Slighted

33 College Fund Presidents At Annual Meeting

MINNEAPOLIS — The Supreme Court decision upon segregation in the schools has not diminished the importance of the Negro college in the system", Dr. Carroll V. Newsom told persons attending the annual United Negro College Fund convocation.

"Recently we are hearing of our disintegrating scientific and technological position when compared to that of the Soviet Union. We are disturbed by the fact that we have grave shortages of manpower on the highest level of competence.

DR. NEWSOM said it rather surprising to note that a major aspect of the problem has rarely been mentioned, namely the fact that millions of children within our vast Negro population have limited opportunity and motivation to develop their latent talents.

"And, let us not forget the well - known anthropoligical truth that the Negro race posses its proper proportion of those who have the native intelligence to become outstanding engineers, scientists, musicians, mathematicians, teachers, doctors and so on."

• • •

THE MINNEAPOLIS meeting marked the first time that all 33 presidents of the United Negro College group attended the Convocation.

Richmond Bank President Heads State UNCF Drive

RICHMOND — Robert T. Marsh Jr., president of the First and Merchants Bank and widely connected with civic and business life in Richmond, will be chairman of the 1958 United Negro College Fund in Virginia.

His appointment was made by Stanley C. Hope, president of Esso Standard Oil Company, who is chairman of the national effort to raise $2,250,000 between April 1 and June 15.

THE Virginia goal this year will be $36,000, an increase of $4,000 over the goals of the past two years. The 1957 contributions totaled $32,338 and marked the first time in 14 years a UNCF goal has been exceeded in Virginia.

Serving with Mr. Marsh as 1958 co - chairman will be Dr. Earl H. McClenney, president of St. Paul's College, Lawrenceville, which was added as a partipant in the Fund this year.

THE Virginia treasurer again will be W. Harry Schwarzchild Jr., president of the Central National Bank of Richmond. Serving as chairman for corporation gifts will be William H. Trapnell, president of the Commonwealth Natural Gas Corporation and chairman of the 1957 campaign in Richmond.

St. Paul's a co - educational college enrolling 380 students and sponsored by the Protestant Episcopal Church, makes the third Virginia college member of the Fund and accounts for the increased state goal this year.

OTHER Virginia members are Virginia Union University in Richmond and Hampton Institute in Hampton. These two are among the four largest members of the Fund.

DR. EARL H. McCLENNEY
Co-Chairman

As in the past, it is expected that the three Virginia institutions will be allocated approximately four times the amount raised in the state campaign.

THE 33 member colleges, all but one of which are located in the South, receive approximately ten per cent of their operating costs each year through the Fund.

Chairman Marsh, who served for 14 years as treasurer and a trustee of Virginia Union University, said that he remembers many years when the university could not have continued its program without the help of the United Negro College Fund. "Without the Fund's assistance for our operation," Marsh said, "we would have been forced to lower standards or curtail our courses."

MR. MARSH is a graduate of the University of Richmond and the University of Virginia. Currently he is a trustee of the University of Richmond and Fork Union Military Academy and a member of the board of the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts and the Richmond Memorial Hospital. He is also a director of several industrial corporations.

He has been connected continuously with the United Negro College Fund in Virginia since its inception in 1944. At various times he has served as State treasurer, member of the State steering committee, and member of the Richmond committee.

FOR THE NEGRO COLLEGES

All private colleges need money. The needs of the United Negro Colleges are no different from those of other colleges—they are simply more acute.

Most Negro families are less able to pay the cost of higher education than other families. Thirty-two of the thirty-three United Negro Colleges are in the South. The vast majority of Negroes still live in this region. Thus, in general, these schools make higher education available to young Negro men and women where they live.

The United Negro Colleges must take moderately prepared students and, in four years, bring them to an academic level commensurate with that of students who were not so handicapped by their early schooling. The Negro colleges alone, in the South, have integrated faculties. They alone provide a campus meeting place for interracial gatherings where men of goodwill can and do work out mutual problems.

A contribution to the United Negro College Fund, Inc., 22 East Fifty-fourth Street, New York 22, is not a gift to charity. It is an investment—and a sound one—in the future. In its annual drive for contributions, April through June, the fund is seeking $2,250,000, or $250,000 more than last year. There are 24,000 young people in the fund's colleges today. They must complete their educations now, without waiting for social readjustments. Generous gifts will make it certain that the United Negro Colleges will continue to discharge with honor their pressing obligations.

Head of United Negro College Fund Named

A. Buel Trowbridge, of McLean, Va., has been named chairman of the United Negro College Fund campaign in Washington.

Participating in the fund are 33 colleges and universities which raise 10 per cent of their operating funds through an annual appeal. The 1958 goal is $2,250,000.

UNITED NEGRO COLLEGE FUND DRIVE

The United Negro College Fund has received a citation from the Lane Bryant Annual Awards in recognition of outstanding community service for 1957, W. J. Trent, jr., Fund executive director, announced.

"The College Fund is also under consideration for one of Lane Bryant's annual awards of $1,000 to be presented Nov. 13 at the Hotel Plaza in New York City," Mr. Trent said.

A UNCF alumna, Dr. Virginia S. Nyabongo, a graduate of Bennett College, Greensboro, N. C., submitted the name of the College Fund for the award. Dr. Nyabongo is director of student and personnel guidance at Tennessee Agricultural and Industrial State University in Nashville. Tennessee State University is tax-supported and not a member of the Fund.

The Lane Bryant Annual Awards of $1,000 to an individual and $1,000 to a group were established in 1948 to encourage voluntary participation in efforts that benefit American home and community life. The firm believes that any individual or group whose non-remunerative efforts have contributed significantly to the strength of the community has added to the security and welfare of humanity.

All nominations for the awards are screened by the Bureau of Applied Social Research at Columbia University under the supervision of Dr. Robert K. Merton.

The first of America's "education chests," the United Negro College Fund set the pattern for collective fund raising for groups of privately supported institutions of learning. Through a single, annual appeal, the Fund raises approximately 10 per cent of the operating costs of its 33 independent, accredited, member colleges and universities.

Now conducting its 15th annual campaign, the College Fund seeks a goal of $2,250,000 in 1958. Our goal is $7,500. LET'S DO OUR PART BY GIVING AS MUCH AS WE CAN. LET'S GO OVER THE TOP. WE ARE ONE OF THE 33 COLLEGES.

$535,529 Distributed In Third UNCF Allocation

NEW YORK—The United Negro College Fund had distributed a third appropriation of $535,529 to 31 member colleges from the proceeds of its 1957 campaign. Announcement of the allocations was made by Dr. F. D. Patterson, UNCF president and director of the Phelps-Stokes Fund.

Since the College Fund was chartered in 1944, it has raised approximately 10 per cent of the combined operating budgets of its member colleges each year, according to Dr. Patterson, founder of the organization.

"Allocations from campaign contributions are used by the colleges to provide scholarships, buy equipment and augment faculty salaries. Scholarships help deserving students, who could not otherwise remain in school, continue their education. Salary increases often prevent valuable faculty members from seeking higher paying appointments elsewhere," Dr. Patterson said.

ADDITIONAL SHARE

In February, 1958, these colleges will also share in an appropriation of $130,000. This will be the final allocation of money raised in a separate five-year capital funds appeal which ended in 1956. The capital funds campaign raised a total of $17,750,000.

"Capital funds money made it possible for many UNCF colleges to erect urgently needed new buildings and repair old ones," Dr. Patterson stated.

"These improved facilities have added to the institutions' fundamental usefulness and have contributed vitally to the whole advancement of education in the South."

Zetas Donate $1,000 To UNCF Campaign

New York — With the presentation of a $1,000 check, Zeta Phi Beta Sorority has set the pace for Greek-letter organization support of the United Negro College Fund's 1958 appeal. College Fund gets $35,000

DETROIT — General Motors last week announced the gift of $35,000 to the United Negro College Fund. The contribution brings GM's total donations to UNCF to $170,000.

The grant was made under General Motors' expanded program of support of higher education which is now in its fourth year. The company, in addition, gives scholarships to some 1,600 students each year.

In making the contribution, Louis G. Seaton, GM vice president, said:

"We are pleased of our support to UNCF because we know that the 27,000 students enrolled in its member (33) colleges will provide many of tomorrow's outstanding leaders."

G. M. Aids Negro College Fund

General Motors Corp. has made a $35,000 gift to the United Negro College Fund, Louis G. Seaton, General Motors vice-president in charge of personnel and chairman of its Committee for Education Grants and Scholarships, announced yesterday.

To date, G. M. has given $170,000 to the U. N. C. F., which provides financial aid to thirty-three colleges in twelve states with a total enrollment of 27,000 students. The latest grant comes at the beginning of U. N. C. F.'s 1958 nationwide fund drive.

The General Motors gift is part of its expanded program of support to higher education, now in its fourth year. As of next September, the corporation will be helping 1,600 college students who, with four-year G. M. scholarships, are studying at colleges of their choice.

Dr. Foster Says UNFC Colleges Here To Stay

Dr. Luther H. Foster, President of Tuskegee Institute, told an audience of United Negro College Fund Campaign workers the campaign "kickoff" luncheon that colleges aided by the annual fund drive have been in operation for long periods of time and are definitely here to stay.

Tremendous Task

He said that these colleges, which were born out of the dreams of such men as Booker T. Washington and George Washington Carver and other pioneer educators, face a tremendous task in providing larger services to young people.

Dr. Foster was introduced to the meeting, held at the Chestnut Street YMCA, by Dr. John H. Lewis, President of Morris Brown College of Atlanta, Georgia, one of the schools benefited by the UNCF. Louisville area Co-chairman of the drive, J. Benjamin Horton, Jr., announced that $1,600 of the $15,000 Louisville had already been contributed.

Heads Above Water

The national goal of the UNCF is $2,250,000 or approximately 10 per cent of the operating expenses of the 33 privately operated colleges and universities which benefit from the fund. Dr. Foster said that this 10 per cent keeps the heads of the schools, financialy speaking, above water and allows them to swim to the shore of higher quality.

Dr. Foster urged support of the UNCF and other causes dedicated to the purpose of helping higher education. We speak of integration, said he, but there are 23,000 students in these 33 colleges who need an education today — not tommorrow.

Mediocrity Compromise

The educator said that there is no compromise with mediocrity and we must have full development for full release of human potential. The UNCF, said Dr. Foster, serves as a spring to release these economic educational and moral development.

The United Negro College Fund

(Second In A Series)

AS the United Negro College Fund goes into its fifteenth year, and is currently conducting it annual campaign for funds to help finance the operation of its 33 member colleges, it is appropriate to review just a few of its accomplishments.

Executive Director WILLIAM J. TRENT JR. of the fund reports that during its existance the UNCF has raised over $35,660,000. This was distributed to 31 colleges (two were added to the membership late in 1957) for operating expense and buildings or equipment. This averages out to something over a million dollars each.

This year the campaign goal is $2,250,0000 — or one-fourth of the member colleges' total requirement for current operations in the coming school year.

Donors to the UNCF will, in fact, be helping to pay the cost of their own children's education, for it is a fact that at no college do the fees paid by any student actually cover the whole cost of his training. To that extent, every student in every college is subsidized partly whether he is a scholarship holder or not. The difference is made up by income from endowment, from appropriations from foundations, individuals, corporations, and similar sources. Without this ten percent assistance from the UNCF, tuition and other student fees would have to be increased proportionately—thereby pricing many youths out of a chance for higher education.

Approximately 45,000 young men and women have been graduated from these colleges joined together in an "educational chest" since 1944. The quality of their education was higher than it would have been without the UNCF.

In 1957, twenty-two percent (22%) of all money contributed by individuals came from Negroes. That percentage deserves to be raised each year. The 78% not contributed by Negro individuals illustrates the clear recognition among the majority group of Americans of the great role and responsibility of Negro private colleges.

Money Raised During '57 Drive

NEW YORK — A grand total of $1,934,407 was received by the United Negro College Fund during 1957 for its member institutions, W. J. Trent, jr., executive director announced.

This total includes contributions for current operating expenses, capital funds and gifts from legacies.

Contributions to the Fund's annual nation-wide appeal, to help its member colleges meet current operating budgets, totaled $1,774,620.

Final gifts for the organization's recently concluded capital funds campaign to cover building costs totalled $131,153. This figure brings the grand total raised for capital funds, since the start of this special campaign in 1951, to $17,750,000.

Contributions from unrestricted legacies and bequests totalled $28,634 in 1957, bringing to $240,358 the total amount held in this category to date. In October 1956, the Fund's board of directors voted to place all unrestricted bequests in reserve to help insure the economic stability of the member colleges. Whenever necessary these reserves may be used to supplement appropriations to them.

At the present time, income from these invested legacies helps defray expenses of the Fund's annual appeal.

Commenting on the figures for 1957, Trent said:

"There has been a significant increase in the number of contributions from individuals throughout the country, representing a healthy broadening of the base of our appeal. The total number of contributors in 1957 was 42,659 or approximately 4,500 more than 1956.

"Gifts from alumni of UNCF colleges and from Negroes throughout the country have contributed substantially to the increase," Trent said. "Alumni and Negro support has grown both in the amounts donated, and in the number of contributors.

"In 1957, it is estimated that Negroes contributed $190,000 to the Fund's campaign, or 11 percent of the total amount raised," Mr. Trent said. "This represents 22 percent of the total number of gifts made by individuals, clubs, fraternal and other organizations, as distinct from contributions by corporations and foundations."

Money raised in the Fund's annual appeal provides 10 percent of the current operating costs of its privately supported, accredited member colleges and unversities. Contributions received in 1957 will be shared by 31 institutions.

With two colleges newly added to its roster, the Fund will seek support for 33 schools in 1958. Their combined enrollment totals more than 24,000 students.

All but one of the institutions are located in the South. Seven are in Georgia. Six in North Carolina; four in Tennessee; four in Texas; three in Virginia. Alabama and Louisiana each have two UNCF colleges. Arkansas, Florida, South Carolina, Mississippi and Pennsylvania each have one.

All UNCF colleges are accredited by the same state and regional agencies which rate all colleges in the areas where they are located.

'57 College Fund income totals nearly $2,000,000

CONTRIBUTIONS from unrestricted legacies and bequests totalled $28,634 in 1957, bringing to $240,358 the total amount held in this category to date.

In October, 1956, the Fund's board of directors voted to place all unrestricted bequests in reserve to help insure the economic stability of the member colleges.

NEGRO COLLEGE FUND MAKES PROGRESS

The United Negro College Fund has closed another successful year having met its 1957 goal. The proceeds of the contributions are allocated among 33 accredited Negro colleges (one was added in 1957) to help pay current expenses. A separate solicitation is made for capital improvements.

For the past five years, Iowa has been asked to raise five thousand dollars; in 1957 the goal was fifty-five hundred dollars. That goal was met, greatly because of the work of the excellent chairman and the support of business and individuals. Negroes did the best job yet in their contributions having raised the amount assigned. This was due, to a great extent, to the foresight of several churches and organizations by including their contributions in the yearly budget. This is an excellent idea—one which more organizations should adopt.

It is difficult to see how any Negro could refuse to make a contribution to this fund. And those who can and won't offer excuses which make little sense.

These school have produced most of the Negro college graduates over the years; these schools are accredited by their respective associations; they are private schools and have nothing to do with the 1954 segregation case; integration is a two-way proposition, thus whites are attending some of them; it will take many years to completely integrate all schools and all Negroes will not be able to attend the so-called integrated colleges.

Des Moines will be asked to do the job again in 1958. The cause is worthy and sound and deserves the full support of the community as a whole.

Locals Contribute $5,615 to UNCF; Interfraternal Council, Corinthian Bapt. Give $50

One hundred eighteen persons in Des Moines contributed $5,615 to the 1957 United Negro College Fund. Among leading Negro contributers were the Inter-Fraternal council and the Corinthian Baptist Church, who donated $50 each.

Six UNCF Atlanta Colleges Get 3rd 1957 Allotment

NEW YORK, — The United Negro College Fund has distributed a final allotment of $105,575.20 from funds raised in the 1957 appeal to its six member colleges in Atlanta. The announcement was made here today by Lee H. Bristol, presidnt of Bristol-Myers Company, and last years national campaign chairman.

This third distribution brings to $265,161.45 the total grant made by the Fund to the Atlanta colleges and universities from the 1957 appeal.

The six institutions sharing the distribution are Atlanta University, Clark College, Gammon Theological Seminary, Morehouse College, Morris Brown College, and Spelman College. The funds are used to provide scholarship and work aid to students who could not otherwise continue their education; to purchase laboratory and classroom equipment; and to augment salaries so that valuable faculty members will not be forced to seek higher paying appointments elsewhere.

Since its establishment in 1944, the Fund has annually raised approximately 10 per cent of the combined operating costs of its colleges. Thirty-three privately supported, accredited colleges and universities are on the Fund's membership roster in 1958.

THE 1958 CAMPAIGN, scheduled between April 1 and June 15, marks the College Fund's 15th annual nation-wide appeal.

Formally organized campaigns will be conducted in 120 cities and towns throughout the country, including the communities in which the member colleges are located.

Where no formal campaigns are organized, appeals are made by letter, TV and radio, newspapers and magazines. The funds raised provide approximately 10 per cent of the operating costs of the UNCF colleges.

All UNCF member schools are privately supported, four-year accredited colleges and universities. The oldest school, Lincoln University, was established in 1854, in Lincoln University, Pa. All other member colleges of the Fund are in the South. They include such famous names as Tuskegee and Hampton Institutes, Fisk and Atlanta Universities. More than 24,000 students are enrolled in the 33 colleges.

Since it was organized in 1944 by the colleges themselves, the United Negro College Fund has raised more than $35,000,000.

Virginia Exceeds Quota In United College Fund Drive

Residents of Norfolk contributed $3,697 to the 1957 campaign of the United Negro College Fund in Virginia, it was announced this week by the city chairman, Pretlow Darden.

This represents an increase of ten per cent over Norfolk gifts in 1956 and was a major factor in putting the Virginia campaign $338 over its goal of $32,000.

* * *

STATE CHAIRMAN Walter W. Craigie, Richmond investment banker, said this is the first time in 15 years that a Virginia campaign has exceeded its goal. In 1956 Virginia contributions totaled approximately $30,000 towards a $32,000 goal.

Craigie attributed the state-wide success to increased solicitation among alumni of the 31 participating private colleges and to increased gifts from Virginia corporations.

* * *

CORPORATION GIFTS accounted for approximately 20 per cent of the total goal. Alumni efforts brought in more than one-third of the total collections. Besides Norfolk, the cities of Richmond, Roanoke, Lynchburg and Newport News also showed gift increases of ten per cent and more.

Alumni activities in Norfolk were directed by the Rev. Thomas M. Venable. Harry Reid, a former chairman, served for the fourth year as secretary of alumni solicitations.

* * *

ASSISTING MR. DARDEN on the general committee were John S. Alfriend, Vice Admiral R. O. Davis, USN (Ret.), William Shands Meacham and Thomas W. Young, all of whom were also members of the state-wide steering committee.

The Virginia campaign was part of the national effort for $2,000,000. In addition to major efforts in the principal cities of the State alumni activities were spread through many small communities.

IN THE TIDEWATER area, for example, alumni conducted organization campaigns in Portsmouth, Suffolk, Yorktown, Smithfield, Williamsburg, Franklin, Gloucester and the Northern Neck of Virginia, under the direction of the Rev. J. Alexander Williams, of Newport News.

Alumni in Newport News, led by Solomon M. Travis, raised $4,429 and solicitation in Hampton and at Hampton Institute brought in $3,400. Exclusive of Norfolk, alumni efforts in the Tidewater region accounted for $11,175, which was more than one-third the entire State quota.

INCREASED INTEREST in the United Negro College Fund in Virginia is expected with the admission of St. Paul's College, Lawrenceville, to membership in the Fund. This fully-accredited, co-educational college will share in the 1958 Fund drive with two other Virginia institutions, Hampton Institute and Virginia Union University, which have been members of the Fund since it was organized in 1944.

Also admitted to membership in the Fund along with St. Paul's was Barber-Scotia College in Concord, N. C. The two new members bring to 33 the number of private colleges and universities supported through the Fund. All but one of the colleges are located in the South.

The first of America's "education chests," the United Negro College Fund has raised approximately ten per cent of the annual operating costs of its member colleges for nearly 15 years.

Moron, president of Hampton Institute, announced last week that from February 24 to March 8, Hampton Institute will participate in the testing of 4000 college scholarship candidates, cooperating wth 28 other members of the United Negro College Fund in the Cooperative Intercollegiate Examination Program.

Collis H. Davis, college registrar, will direct the examinations, which is open to seniors and a limited number of high school sophomores and juniors of exceptional ability.

STUDENTS WILL indicate their college choice on the examination form and results will be sent there for consideration. Hampton scholarships range from $200 to $600.

Application forms may be secured from high school principals, from Hampton Institute by writing to the Office of the Director, Cooperative Intercollegiate Examination Program, 22 E. 54th street, New York 22, N. Y. Admission is by ticket only. Tickets will be sent to each candidate upon receipt of application and $2 examination fee.

APPLICATION and fees must be mailed before February 1. After that date a late registration fee of $2.50 will be charged.

There are a number of testing centers in Virginia and other states supervised by cooperating colleges. Students desiring to compete for Hampton Institute scholarships may take the examination in any of these centers.

United Negro College Fund Ups Goal For Fifteenth Annual Campaign

New York, Feb. 21 — A $2,250,000 goal has been set for the 1958 United Negro College Fund campaign, it was announced here today by Stanley C. Hope, national campaign chairman. Mr. Hope is president of Esso Standard Oil Co.

"Mounting costs of education and the recent addition of two colleges to Fund membership have made it necessary to increase the goal by a quarter-of-a-million dollars this year," Mr. Hope said. "The two newly admitted colleges, Barber-Scotia, Concord, N. C., and St Paul's, Lawrenceville, Va., bring the current membership to 33."

The 1958 campaign, scheduled between April 1 and June 15, marks the College Fund's 15th annual nation-wide appeal. Formally-organized campaigns will be conducted in 120 cities and towns throughout the country, including the communities in which the member colleges are located. Where no formal campaigns are organized, appeals are made by letter, TV and radio, newspapers and magazines.

The support raised provides approximately 10 per cent of the operating costs of the UNCF colleges. It is used by the schools principally to provide scholarships. Contributions are also used to purchase laboratory equipment and library books, to underwrite student health programs and to bring faculty salaries more nearly in line with those of comparable institutions.

All UNCF member schools are privately supported, four-year accredited colleges and universities. The oldest school, Lincoln University, was established in 1854, in Lincoln University, Pa. All other member colleges of the Fund are in the South. They include such famous names as Tuskegee and Hampton Institutes, Fisk and Atlanta Universities. More than 24,000 students are enrolled in the 33 colleges.

Since it was organized in 1944 by the colleges themselves, the United Negro College Fund has raised more than $35,000,000.

3 Russian Scientists Share 1958 Nobel Prize for Physics

STOCKHOLM, Oct. 28 (UPI) Three Soviet scientists today were awarded the 1958 Nobel Prize for Physics, putting Russian critics of the Nobel foundation in a somewhat awkward position.

Named by the Swedish Academy of Science to share the $41,250 physics award were Pavel Alexevic Cherenkov, Ilya Michailovic Frank and Igor Eugenevic Tamm.

They were honored for their discovery and development of the "Cherenkov effect" which is believed to have been put into practical use in Sputnik III. One aspect of the research was driving electrons at a velocity greater than the speed of light.

The Academy also awarded the Nobel Prize for Chemistry to Frederich Sanger, 40, of Cambridge University for his work on proteins, especially insulin. It said the British biochemist might have found the clue to the spark of life which is transmitted in proteins.

There were immediate indications that the Russians would react much more favorably to the physics award than they did to the selection of Boris Pasternak as winner of the 1958 prize for literature. It was the first time in the 58-year history of the Nobel Foundation that Russians had won two prizes in one year.

Ironically, the Russians chose today to announce the expulsion of Pasternak, whose best-known novel, "Dr. Zhivago," hs been banned in the Soviet Union, from the Union of Writers. It left in doubt whether Pasternak would be able to come to Stockholm for the award and prize money.

Picture on Page A16

In making the physics award, the Academy of Science said the work done by the three Russians had payed the way for the recent discovery of the anti-proton at the University of California and facilitated Stanford University studies of nuclear structure by electronic diffraction. It is also the basis for new methods of studying cosmic rays.

The chain of physical discoveries which won the physics prize for the three Russians began in 1943, when Cherenkov noticed that a bottle of water under radioactive bombardment gave off a weak blue light.

He determined later that the light was created when radiation accelerated electrons in the water, driving them up to a velocity greater than the speed of light.

Tamm and Frank developed Cherenkov's discovery. They are believed to have used it as the basis for a new type radiation counter installed in Sputnik III which still is orbiting around the earth.

[Cherenkox took his doctor's degree in 1940 and from 1946 he has been chief of his section at the Russian Academy of Sciences, Reuters reported.

[Frank, born in 1908, has worked at the Academy since 1934 and has been professor at Moscow University since 1944.

[Tamm, born in 1895, has been at the Academy since 1934 and has taught at Moscow University since 1924. He already holds the Stalin prize and Order of Lenin. His work has been mainly on quantum mechanics, the theory of radiation and cosmic rays ,and nuclear particle reaction.]

3 Americans Share Nobel Medical Prize

Receive Award For Their Work on Heredity Problems

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Oct. 30 (AP)—The 1958 Nobel prize in medicine and physiology was awarded today to three American scientists for their work on problems of heredity. The work could have strong bearing on the future of cancer research.

One holf of the $41,420 prize goes to 33-year-old Dr. Joshua Lederberg of the University of Wisconsin and the other half to Drs. E. L. Tatum, 49, of New York's Rockefeller Institute, and George Wells Beadle, 55, of the California Institute of Technology.

Today's award is the fourth Nobel prize for this year. The only other Nobel prize remaining to be awarded, for peace, will be announced later.

In awarding half of the medical prize to Lederberg, the committee said it was "for his discoveries concerning genetic recombination and the organization of the genetic material in bacteria."

The term genetic recombination is a term for fertilization in the world of bacteria. Lederberg discovered that from the geneticists' viewpoint "this corresponds exactly to the normal sexual fertilization in the higher organisms."

The committee said the other half of the prize goes to Beadle and Tatum "for their discovery that genes act by regulating specific chemical processes."

Describing the work of the prize winners, Torbjorn Casperson of the Caroline Institute said the research of Beadle and Tatum in the early 1940s "led to the discovery that the individual gene acts by directing individual steps in the course of chemical synthesis in the cell. All the substances in the cell are built up step by step in a long series of synthesizing processes.

"The individual steps are governed by individual genes by their regulation of the production of specific enzymes for each separate step.

Casperson, himself a world authority on genetics, said this discovery "offered the first chance to understand the mode of action of the genes" and is one of the foundations of modern genetics.

Based on Bread Mold

The research of the two Americans was based largely on a red bread mold called neurospora crassa. Any strain of this mold can be multiplied a million times in two days without genetic change. By disturbing thefunction of its genes, researchers have been able in a short time to figure out some fundamental chemical mechanism of heredity.

Beadle and Tatum bombarded the bread mold with radiation until they produced organisms which could not make certain necessary amino acids. They then knew they had changed or destroyed a specific gene in the cell. One by one they created new types of mold cells lacking the power to make one or another of the amino acids.

This led them to the idea that genes might be minipulated in man to prevent him from growing harmful cells, such as cancer, or perhaps make him immune to many diseases.

Working with Tatum, Lederberg applied the techniques developed for the neurospora on bacteria, which are much more primitive than the mold.

They discovered that various strains of bacterial could actually be crossed and that their offspring received a new combination of heredity factors.

Got Doctorate in 1948

Lederberg as born in Montclair, N. J., and was graduated with honors from Columbia University's premedical course when he was 19.

He then attended Columbia's College of Physicians and Surgeons, was invited to Yale to work with Tatum and was awarded his doctorate in 1948.

He went to the University of Wisconsin in 1948. Last year he organized and became the chairman of a medical genetics department at the University.

Next February he will leave Wisconsin to become chairman of a similar department at Stanford University.

Beadle was born Oct. 22, 1903, on a farm near Wahoo, Neb. in 1946 he was appointed head of the division of biology at California Institute of Technology.

Beadle is at present visiting Oxford University in England to lecture on biochemical genetics.

Tatum has been a member and professor of the Rockefeller Institute since January, 1957. The Institute is a scientific research center and a graduate university.

A native of Boulder, Colo., Tatum received his AB degree in chemistry from the University of Wisconsin in 1931.

A&T Grad Who Led Class Didn't Finish High School

GREENSBORO, N. C. — A young man who graduated with highest honors at the A & T College commencement this month entered college the "hard way" — he never finished high school.

Alexander Gardner, New Bern, N. C., who last week, received the degree in engineering physics, considered by many students at the college the most difficult of the programs offered here, was cited Summa Cum Laude. He was the only class member in the degree program to be so honored.

Gardner, a student leader, served as president of the Student Council in the senior year and participated in a wide variety of extra-curricular activities all through his college career.

ENTERED AIR FORCE

Young Gardner dropped out of the West Street High School in his native New Bern midway the first year because he "was tired of school", put his age up and joined the U. S. Merchant Marine Service. He later entered the Air Force.

After the military stint, he returned home and operated a small business for a couple of years, but was never happy over the progress he was making. A college education was the choice he made to accomplish those dreams of a successful life.

Gardner has said many times that his most difficult problem was to gain entrance to A&T. From the beginning, college officials tried to dissuade him from attempting a college program in view of his limited high school training and certainly from pursuing engineering with no high school mathematics or physics.

But Gardner refused to accept the advice. He passed the difficult college entrance examination with flying colors, entered A&T in the winter of 1954, and posted the outstanding record.

His ambition is to return to his Alma Mater as an instructor in engineering. Immediately employed as a physicist by the U. S. Navy Yard in Philadelphia, he plans to begin study, on a part - time basis, this fall at Temple university for an advanced degree in engineering phwsics.

Gardner, again has chosen to reach his objective the "hard way," but many of his friends believe that his dogged determination and demonstrated ability will pay off.

Brilliant Young Student To Receive M. A. In August From Atlanta University School of Business Administration; Honor Graduate of Morehouse; Recipient of $3,000 Merrill Grant For Year's Study; Is Pearl High Graduate

BY LUTHER CARMICHAEL

William Madison Townsend, a graduate of Nashville's Pearl High School, and honor graduate of Morehouse College in 1957, has been awarded one of the two Merrill $3000 Foreign Study fellowships.

Mr. Townsend is a candidate for the Master of Arts degree from the Atlanta University School of Business Administration. He will receive the coveted degree in next month.

A native of St. Louis, Missouri, Mr. Townsend plans to sail to Europe around the first of September, where he will spend a few days visiting at the World Fair in Brussels. Returning from the continent, he plans to enroll in the London School of Economics in early October. According to news received in Nashville, the young student could have enrolled in either of several other British universities, including Cambridge and Oxford universities.

Well-Known in Nashville

Mr. Townsend is widely-known here as a quiet, unassuming young man, and as a brilliant student in flute and clarinet in the Pearl High band, and played Solo Flute in the Pearl Symphonic Band.

Mr. Townsend is the younger son of Dr. A. M. Townsend, Jr., prominent St. Louis Physician, and president of the National Medical Association. He is a grandson of Dr. A. M. Townsend, Sr., executive secretary of the Sunday School Publishing Board, National Baptist Convention, USA, Inc.

During the summer of 1959, Mr. Townsend will have an opportunity to tour a majority of European countries. As of September of this year, he will become officially con- of Blayton and Company, Atlanta, but is being granted a year's leave of absence for his study abroad. He will assume his duties with the Blayton company upon his return to the United States in September 1959.

Given By Invesiment Firm Head

The Merrill fellowships are donated by Charles E. Merrill, Jr. head of a New York investment firm, and chairman of the Atlanta University Board of Trustees. He has given the awards for the past two years.

Miss Fronnie Whitehurst, a biology major, is the recipient of the other fellowship for the 1958-59 scholastic year. She is planning tentatively to work in tissue culture at the University College of North Wales, Banger.

Mr. Townsend is currently in Nashville, where he is working on his thesis.

Higher Standards Hoped In Pending Scholarship Bill

WASHINGTON, (INS)—Education leaders expect that the federal scholarship bill now pending in congress will spur the nation's high schools toward higher standards when enacted.

The 180-million dollar a year measure is designed award scholarships competitively as a stimulus to school leaders to prepare their students to qualify for special studies.

Educators argue that a school whose pupils failed consistently to win the $1,000-a-year college grants would be shamed into doing something about it. They say it also would "wake up" local communities to a realization of their school standards.

The bill, approved this week by unanimous vote in a House Subcommittee, is now before the full committee with action expected early next month.

SENATE COMMITTEE

The Senate Education and Labor Committee may not act before midsummer because it is tied up with Labor Legislation. But education leaders of branches of congress predict passage without substantial changes.

In addition to scholarships, states will be given funds partly on a matching basis for loans to college students, teachers training in Science, Mathematics and Foreign Languages, High School Laboratory Equipment, and promotion of TV as a teaching medium.

SCHOLARSHIPS

The 25,000 scholarships will be divided among the states on the basis of high school population. Typical allotments would be 1,970 for New York, 1,272 for Ohio, 1,578 for California, 598 for Alabama and 35 for Nevada.

States then would establish commissions to draw up objective tests and award the grants on a Statewide basis.

The bill also would provide 10 million dollars a year for teacher training programs in the science-math specialties, including workshops and institutes. Only eight states now have programs along this line.

Another two million dollars would foster use of TV as a teaching medium while 60 million dollars in matching funds, partly on a needs basis, would be given states to buy science equipment for high schools.

LOAN PROGRAM

The student loan program has been one of the most criticized features of the bill. It provides 40 million dollars for loans to be administered by the universities which will kick in 20 per cent.

The student begins repaying the loan one year after graduation and has 10 years to pay, with interest pegged at two percent the first five years and four per cent for the next five years.

Trio Receives Honorary Degrees

The recipients of honorary degrees at Howard University are shown together prior to Howard's recent 90th Commencement. They are (l to r) Dr Theodore K Lawless, Chicago dermatologist who received the Doctor of Science degree; James L Kindelberger, chairman of the board and managing director of the North American Aviation Corp of Los Angeles, and Dr F D Patterson, president of the Phelps Stokes Fund of New York City. Mr Kindelberger and Dr Patterson received Doctor of Laws degrees.

Competition Underway For Schenley Scholarship Awards

PHILADELPHIA — Competition for Schenley Wholesalers Foundation undergraduate scholarship awards for the 1959-60 scholastic year has been announced by Manuel M. Eskind, president of the Foundation, which in initiating the program this year presented scholarship grants to 18 students, three of whom were Negroes.

Again children of persons employed by members of the Foundation, or any other student recommended by a Foundation member, will be eligible to receive awards up to $1,500 a year under the second annual scholarship program. In addition to the scholarships, the Foundation will continue its grants in-aid to privately endowed colleges and universities.

The Schenley Wholesalers Foundation, an organization composed of Schenley distributors throughout the United States, was organized in 1957 as a medium for making public benefactions.

The procedure to be followed in competing for current awards is basically the same as previously, Mr. Eskind stated. Candidates must be students seeking to attend an accredited college or university or who have previously matriculated.

U. S. Steel Offers Prizes Of $44,000 To College Engineering Students

College engineering students will be asked to put their talents to practical and possibly profitable use in the steel highway bridge design competition sponsored by the American Bridge Division of United States Steel Corporation. Six institutions as Howard University, Tuskegee Institute and Tennessee A. & I University will be asked to participate.

According to officials administering the program, fifteen awards totaling $44,000 to professional engineers and college engineering students will be presented. The competition is dedicated to the stimulation of the best use of steel in the design of bridges for the 41,000 mile system of interstate and defense highways to be built during the next 15 years.

The competition poses the problem of designing an overpass structure in steel to carry a two-lane highway at right angles over a four-lane interstate highway on level ground. The overpass must be designed in accordance with standards developed by the American Association of State Highway officials and approved by the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads.

All entries will be judged on the basis of originality of design, utilization of the properties of steel, economy, and appearance of the structure. The type of overpass structure, length of spans, and other factors will be left to the discretion of the entrant.

Complete information on the competition may be secured from American Bridge Division, United States Steel Corporation, 525 William Penn Place, Pittsburgh, 30, Pa., and from the American Institute of Steel Construction, 101 Park Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

Woman Wins $1,200 In Cashword Puzzle

BY CASHWORD CARL

I got a winner, folks. A $1,200 winner, to be exact.

Mrs. Ruth Evans, Negro, of 1161 Loraine St., NW, had a perfect solution to my puzzle last week.

And she said she got her winning entry by doing the opposite of what she usually does.

She said she always looks up the words in the dictionary when she's trying my puzzle. But this time, instead of putting down what she thought was right, she put down the next thing that came into her mind.

And with that unusual method she copped my $1,200 prize.

DON'T BE discouraged because you didn't win. As a special Christmas bonus I'm gonna start off the new prize at a whopping $500, and I'll be expecting plenty of entries. Maybe you can come up with the right method.

Mrs. Evans regained her breath after I told her she had won all that $1,200 and said she knows just what she'll do with it.

"I've got some bills I want to pay off," she said. "And if there's a little cash left over I want to go to New York City for a visit.

"I always have wanted to see New York; I wouldn't want to live there, though. All my friends are here."

The 39-year-old winner, who works as a maid, had the only perfect puzzle out of 128,075 entries.

THE HARD WORDS for everyone were: 6 Across, which should have been "hunter" instead of "punter"; 7 Across, which should have been "neat" instead of "near," and 22 Across, which should have been "lag" instead of "hag."

On the vertical words the hard ones were: 1 Down, which should have been "surly" instead of "burly"; 2 Down, which should have been "steam" instead of "steal," and 5 down, which should have been "sea," not "tea."

Dig right in on this week's new puzzle and maybe I can wish you a merry Christmas with cash. My latest stumper is on Page 20A of today's paper.

At Integrated School

Colored Student Is An Honor Graduate

Special to Journal and Guide

GREENSBORO, N. C. — The first colored student to graduate from an integrated public school in North Carolina receives her diploma this week. And she is graduating with honors.

The "first" in integrated education in the state is being set by Miss Josephine Boyd who graduated from Greensboro Senior high school Tuesday.

FOR "SEVERAL months, according to reliable sources Miss Boyd was on honor rolls at the school she attended as the only colored student among 1900.

Six colored students started studies at heretofore white schools here in early September. In addition to Miss Boyd, they are Brenda Florence, fifth grade; Emmy Florence sixth grade; Russell Herring, seventh grade; Elijah Herring, Jr., ninth grade and Harold Davis, eighth grade, all at Greensboro's Gillespie Park school.

ELSEWHERE IN North Carolina, at Winston-Salem and Charlotte, integration of student bodies took place for the first time this school year.

With the exception of one incidence at Charlotte, where Miss Dorothy Counts was forced out of Harding high school by spitting and heckling students, the process has been —on the surface—uneventful.

BUT ALMOST daily, students in the Winston-Salem and Charlotte — and presumably the Greensboro schools —had to face ordeals of name-calling, etc.

For example, Gustavus A. Roberts only colored student among 1,600 at Charlotte's Central high, can't recall how many times he has been called "Black Boy." Yet Gustavus says his vigil at the school was not lonesome and "I wasn't nervous.

• • •

"THERE WAS nothing to be nervous about" he said.

At Piedmont Junior high school, Charlotte, Gustavus' sister, Givaud, found herself an "average" student among the 600 there with herself as the lone colored pupil. "She's doing okay," the principal said.

• • •

AT ALEXANDER Graham junior high school, Charlotte,, Delores Huntley listened to names like "Buckwheat" and "n....r" for a year. She will not be at the school next year because it is being abolished and she has been reassigned to colored Second Ward high, which is nearer her home.

At Winston-Salem, Principal C. R. Joyner of Reynolds high school said that Gwendolyn Yvonne Bailey is "getting along well. Her grades are very good." Miss Bailey completed her junior year at the school this week as the only colored student.

Denied Negro Youth Wins Scholarship

Robert A. Eldridge III, 10, a Negro student whose application to a white school was ruled out by Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan, is attending the Burgundy Farm school in Alexandria.

Robert, the son of A. Eldridge Jr. of 716 S. 1st st., Arlington, won a scholarship provided by the Unitarian Church of Arlington. His parents are members of the church.

The pastor, the Rev. Ross A. Weston, said yesterday "We're doing this primarily to help prepare him for the transition into a white school." He declared that Robert, a 5th grade student, did well in mixed Sunday school classes for a full year and passed psychological tests "with flying colors" at the desegregated Alexandria private school.

The Arlington School Board disapproved Robert's application to the Patrick Henry Elementary School, along with four others, on grounds of adaptibility.

The scholarship is for $550 to cover tuition for one full year. The church board of trustees launched a fund drive last week to finance the scholarship.

Fisk Graduates Share Honors With Dr. Dubois

'Illustrious Son' Observes 70th Year of Graduation

Dr. DuBois, 90 years old, was cited as one of Fisk's "most illustrious sons." President Stephen J. Wright read the citation which said in part:

"In the course of these three score years and ten (since his graduation from Fisk), you have combined prophetic vision, heroic courage, creative imagination, indefatigable energy and an articulate pen to advance the cause of education, enlightenment, freedom and opportunity for men everywhere.

"As the higher education of Negroes became a burning issue, your voice helped America to see that higher education for Negroes could not be developed on the false philosophy of limited capacities and limited needs."

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse college, told the graduates that they received increased responsibilities along with their degrees.

"To whom much is given, much is required," Dr. Mays said. "If nothing else, this education will create a divine restlessness and leave you discontent with mediocre performances."

Three alumni were presented Fisk Alumni Distinguished Service awards by Louis P. Clark, alumni association president. Recipients were the Rev. Charles Kelly of Tuskegee institute, Ala.; Dr. Ernest Alexander of New York City, and John A. Galloway, retiring principal of Pearl high school in Nashville.

Dr. Wright announced that Dr. DuBois had been made an alumni member of the Fisk chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, national honor society. He also revealed the creation of the W. E. B. DuBois Lecture Series which will open next fall with Dr. DuBois as the initial lecturer. The series, according to Wright, will be endowed by the class of 1935.

TEACHER, 71, GIVES GIFTS ON LEAVING

2 Schools Get Book Funds From Archibald Williams, Bound for Barbados

By EDITH EVANS ASBURY

Archibald Williams will fly back to his native Barbados tomorrow to rest, convalesce, muse about the hundreds of New York children he has taught and perhaps find new children to teach.

His age, 71 years, and a recent illness prompted him to return to the land where relatives will be near and the cost of living low.

His Thanksgiving Day is brightened however, by the knowledge that he was able to provide gifts last week to Public School 194, where he taught, and to the City College, from which he was graduated in 1926 at the age of 39.

To the public school he gave $1,000, for the purchase of books for the library. He gave $2,000 for the same purpose to his alma mater.

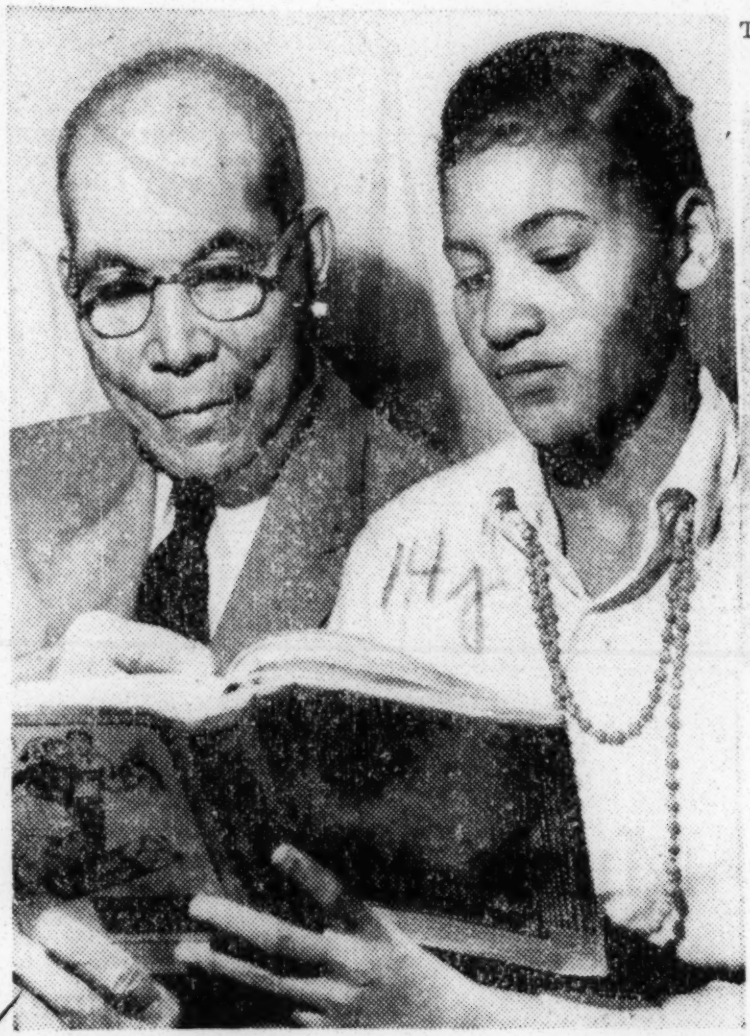
Fond of Children

"I wish it could have been more," the dignified, scholarly looking teacher said yesterday as he finished packing in his Harlem apartment. "I got very fond of those children. And if it weren't for City College, I might still be operating an elevator."

Mr. Williams came to New York in 1922. He had taught in Barbados but had only an elementary school education. To qualify for City College, he taught himself Latin, French, Spanish, algebra and geometry.

"I flunked the first entrance exams," he recalled, "but I passed the second time, and made A's and B's in all my courses except public speaking. It felt a little strange to be so much older than the other students, but very soon that didn't bother me or them."

To support himself while attending day classes at City College, Mr. Williams operated an elevator in an apartment house on East 112th Street from 5 P. M. to midnight seven days a week.



The New York Times

FAREWELL LESSON: Archibald Williams, 71, retired teacher, tutoring Helen Walker, 15, in Latin yesterday at his home at 9 East 118th Street. Mr. Williams is to return tomorrow to Barbados, where his relatives live.

Worked in Post Office

"I was busy from 5 to 7, when people were coming home, again at 8, when they left for the theatre, and around 11 when they began coming home," Mr. William said. "But I managed to do my studying in between."

Before obtaining his teaching appointment, Mr. Williams worked in a Post Office station on West fifty-second Street and in the General Post Office. His first teaching assignment was in Queens. He requested a post in Harlem and was sent to Public School 90, on West 148th Street, in 1929. He was transferred in 1940 to Public School 194, an All-Day Neighborhood School, from which he retired three years ago.

"There will be children where I am going," he said yesterday, "and perhaps I can tutor them a little.

"I will also tell them about the children here and the glories of New York—the subways, tall buildings, spacious parks, long rivers and steep places. Our island is flat."

Mr. Williams bade farewell to his former pupils at Public School 194 at their Thanksgiving assembly, and they dedicated their songs to him.

"In my heart I will carry your voices where they have never been," he told them, "above the clouds and over the ocean."

And, speaking for children, as he has for many years, the retired teacher read, in a quavering voice, a "Children's Thanksgiving Prayer" he had composed. It began.

Dear God, we little girls and boys
Most humbly thank you for the joys
That earth and air and warm bright sun
So freely give to everyone.

How to Win a Philatelic Prize

Until two weeks ago, John Thomas was just another stamp collector. Today his name has been added to the list of philatelists who own collections of national interest.

As a novice in the fullest sense of the word, he assembled, arranged and personally mounted "The Story of the Bible Through Stamps," sent it to the National Topical Exhibition in Little Rock, Ark., and came away with top prize—a gold medal—in strong competition with some of the country's leading veterans.

Mr. Thomas' accomplishment proves once again that it is not necessary to have unlimited financial resources to build a collection that is philatelically important. It demonstrates that a philatelic reputation is not essential to take a top award when judges appraise the stamps shown rather than the owner's influence.

Began Collecting 10 Years Ago

He began collecting stamps just ten years ago, but when he set himself up in business as a professional photographer—graduation, wedding and free-lance news pictures—he shelved his album and returned to it only five years later. A lover of classic art, he then confined his postage stamp activities to such designs as reproductions of famous paintings, statuary and other masterpiece forms.

Just over a year ago he read an article about stamps which depicted various Bibles. As a religious man, he collected all of the ones listed in it.

Though these formed a nucleus, Mr. Thomas wanted to delve much deeper and added other specimens which had a direct bearing upon stories the Bible records. He had quite a number of them when he joined the New York Chapter of the American Topical Association, but without mounting experience he had no way of knowing how he might put the collection into a presentable form.

Sought Original Approach

Religious stamp collecting was no novelty. Monsignor Ferdinand Cech, of LaCrosse, Wis.; Burnes Solomon and David Hoffberg, both of New York, pioneered this specialty field more than twenty years ago. But Mr. Thomas did not wish simply to copy other collectors' albums. He wanted an original approach.

"Mrs. Margaret Hackett, president of the association and herself a frequent winner of prizes for topical collections, was especially helpful in suggesting how I might arrange my album," Mr. Thomas said.

He approached his project with enthusiasm and energy. It took him three tries to lay out his pages and add notes about his stamps' designs before he finally had a presentation that satisfied himself and met with Mrs. Hackett's approval.

The collection now is mounted on blank, loose-leaf pages, divided into various sections that trace the history and philatelically tell the story of the Bible, from Genesis through the New Testament.

Logical Additions

In his intensive research on the subject, he found quite a number of stamps which logically could be added to the collection. Egypt's recent issue was intended to commemorate the incursions of Salah ed-Din; Mr. Thomas used it to trace the difficulties of Christianity in defending itself against Islam.

During the ten years of Israel's existence, many stamps have been issued expressly for the Hebrews; Mr. Thomas, however, uses these same stamps to show transition from the Old to the New Testament.

The appeal of the collection lies in the perfect relationship between stamps and text.

In building any kind of topical collection, owners have a tendency to add so many notes about the design's story that the stamps are subordinated. Mr. Thomas has kept a relationship which focuses attention on the stamps; such notations as are included in neatly typewritten paragraphs add to rather than detract from the pages.

They reflect endless hours of philatelic and historical research, and it was this factor which was largely responsible for his getting so important an award, even though he was "an unknown."

Study of Discrimination in Scholarships Raises Large Questions of Legality

Sun. 6-8-58

By GENE CURRIVAN

The problem of discriminatory scholarships and their possible legal implications has recently been under inquiry by the New York University Law Review.

Since the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the public schools there has been speculation as to whether other discriminatory limitations within the field of education might also be unconstitutional. Owing to the increased emphasis on scholarships, attention has turned in this direction.

At the moment little can be done about private institutions that discriminate for reasons of race, nationality or religion, but public agencies must abide by the Fourteenth Amendment, as interpreted by the Supreme Court in the case of schools and colleges.

The New York University Law Review set out to determine to what extent there were discriminatory practices in the granting of scholarships by state universities.

The results, compiled by Patricia P. Shad, associate editor of the Review, showed that there were many restricted scholarships administered by state universities. Most of them were based on geographical considerations, a common and acceptable form of discrimination, since most states favor citizens who help foot the bills.

Religious Restrictions

However, there were ten state-supported colleges (unnamed) that said they administered scholarship funds provided by private donors whose terms restrict them to members of particular religious faiths. There were three scholarships valued at $400 for "Catholics only," thirty-eight totaling $12,100 for Protestants, one for "Christians only" at $150 and eleven other religious scholarships valued at $2,020. No scholarships were reserved exclusively for persons of the Jewish faith.

In the Review's survey of 239 state-supported colleges "no example has been found of a state's granting an appropriation of public funds or of a state university's establishing a scholarship program, restricted to members of a particular religion."

The Review, however, said there was serious doubt that the First Amendment, concerning religious freedom, would permit a state agency to dispense scholarship funds on the basis of religious affiliation—even when the funds are from private sources.

When this point was brought to the attention of the State University of New York, a spokesman said the university would not accept or administer a scholarship that was discriminatory. They have none that discriminate against race, religion or nationality, he said.

Nationality and Race

Other restricted scholarships reported in the survey included:

Nationality: Sixteen colleges have scholarships for foreign students. Seven have funds for "foreign students" with no specific country named; one has a scholarship for Canadians; another for Hungarian refugees.

Race: Twenty-three schools administer racially restricted scholarships. Seven colleges reported annual scholarships totaling $28,270 for Caucasians only; seven have annual scholarships totaling $1,175 for Negroes only; four have scholarships totaling $12,750 for American Indians and four have scholarships valued at $1,900 for Orientals. There are also seven colleges which reported themselves segregated for whites "by state law" and three colleges segregated for Negroes. The scholarships at these institutions are racially restricted.

"Decisions of the Supreme Court," the Review stated, "make it extremely doubtful that any classification based on race is reasonable in the field of education. The Court has said, in effect, that segregation has no place in state education because it is repugnant to the objective of education—an enlightened and knowledgeable citizenry.

"This reasoning should apply to scholarship policies as well as to admission policies, at least in the case of scholarships which exclude minority groups."

Girard College Cited

A case in point, the Review noted was the Supreme Court decision on admission practices at Girard College, Philadelphia, a privately endowed institution, "for poor, white, male orphans." The court ruled that Girard must end its discrimination because the board of trustees that operates the college was an agency of the State of Pennsylvania.

Girard later circumvented this ruling by appointing private trustees.

The Review expressed the opinion that the court ruling may eventually encompass charitable trusts if their discriminatory scholarships are administered by state agencies.

"Under the present law," the Review stated, "a donor may create a charitable trust for the benefit of a small and narrow class regardless of the arbitrary nature of the classification, as long as the trust is not illegal or contrary to public policy.

"The Girard decision has, of course, modified this rule by holding that a charitable trust [operated by] a state agency is subject to the Fourteenth Amendment. Some writers, however, have expressed the belief that Girard may be the first step toward holding that all charitable trusts are subject to the Fourteenth Amendment including those with private trustees."

As the matter now stands the colleges maintain they are not responsible for the content of discriminatory scholarships. They are merely administering agents.

FORMER M'HOUSE MAN MAY SAVE GOVT. MONEY

Bill Rutland, former Morehouse College student and husband of the former Miss Eva Neal of Atlanta, recently developed an idea which will save the federal government close to $10 million.

As logistics officer in plans and programming at McClelland Air Force Base in Sacramento, Calif., Rutland last Summer began working on ways and means to maintain supply support for the F-86K aircraft which is flown exclusively by foreign countries in the Military Assistance Program.

Supply support for the aircraft, built by North American Airlines and assembled in Italy, was to have been accomplished through off-shore procurement in Europe. However, countries involved could not agree on a medium of exchange and could not develop a method through which all countries' requirements could be consolidated.

Rutland, with the assistance of supply people, conceived a plan which provides for an on-the-spot review of consumption and a one-time extended procurement of items needed for the F-86K aircraft, while tools and vendors were still available.

This was done through a four-year package for each country involved and covered in the review.

Rutland, a native Alabaman, and his group had finished the country inspection by January this year and were able to prove to higher headquarters that a $26 million requirement could be procured for $16.2 million if a waiver of the one year buy policy was authorized.

The plans were approved and adopted by the Air Materiel Command and the Air Force.

Rutland, who has worked for the federal government for about 12 years, about four of which have been on his present occupation, resides with his wife and four children at their Sacramento home. Mrs. Rutland, a graduate of Spelman College, formerly resided at 249 Crumley St., S.W.

Gets Degree With Highest Honors, But . . .

Never Finished High School

GREENSBORO, N. C. — A young man who was graduated with highest honors at the A&T College commencement on June 2 entered college the "hard way" — he never finished high school.

Alexander Gardner, New Bern, N. C., who received the degree in engineering physics, considered by many students at the college the most difficult of the programs offered here, was cited summa cum laude. He was the only class member in the degree program to be so honored.

Gardner, a student leader, served as president of the Student Council in the senior year and participated in a wide variety of extracurricular activities all through his college career.

YOUNG GARDNER dropped out of the West Street High School in his native New Bern midway the first year because he "was tired of school," put his age up and joined the U.S. Merchant Marine Service. He later entered the Air Force.

After the military stint, he returned to his hometown and operated a small business there for a couple of years, but was never happy over the progress he was making. A college education was the choice he made to accomplish those dreams of a successful life.

Gardner has said many times that his most difficult problem was to gain entrance at A&T, for he had only a few after that. From the beginning college officials tried to dissuade him from attempting a college program in view of his limited high school training and certainly from pursuing engineering with no high school mathematics or physics But Gardner refused to accept the advice. He passed the difficult college entrance examination with flying colors, entered A&T in the winter of 1954, and posted the outstanding record.

HIS AMBITION is to return to his alma mater as an instructor in engineering. Immediately employed as a physicist by the U.S. Navy Yard in Philadelphia, he plans to begin study, on a part-time basis, this fall at Temple University for an advanced degree in engineering physics.

Gardner, again has chosen to reach his objective by the "hard way," but many of his friends believe that his dogged determination and demonstrated ability will pay off.

Negro Girls Admitted To Ky. Girls State

Some of the most important developments at the Thirty-eight Annual Convention of the American Legion Auxiliary, department of Kentucky, held recently in Louisville, was the admittance of Negro Girls to "Girls State."

"Girls State" was organized twelve years ago as a non-partisan, non-political attempt to show youth a practical application of Americanism and good citizenship.

It provides citizenship training for girls of high school age in every constituent department of American Legion Auxiliary; to afford them an opportunity to live together as self-governing citizens; to inform them of the duties, privileges, rights and responsibilities of an American citizen, in order that they may understand and participate in the functioning of the government. It also helps them grasp the meaning of some of the responsibilties they will face when they reached adulthood.

Eligibility is limited to any girl in her junior or senior year of high school. The high school in cooperation with the Auxiliary unit selects the girls, but final approval is left with the local American Legion Auxiliary.

The Auxiliary Units over the state are asked to sponsor girls to "Girls State" and make this program statewide in its applicaion and interest. An Auxiliary Unit interested in fostering the program but unable to finance a girl should immediately contact another Unit, a civic or cultural group in the community and extend that privilege to them.

The members of Peter Salem Auxiliary Unit 45, had been striving since 1957 when the American Legion lifted the bars of segregation from the Fifth District Meetings, to achieve entrance to Girls State.

Girls State is conducted yearly in the various colleges and universities in the state of Kentucky.

Dr. Anna Cooper 100 years old, too busy to celebrate birthday

WASHINGTON — Dr. Anna Cooper was 100 years old Saturday, but she was too busy to celebrate.

Among the birthday greeting cards that found their way to her home, were those signed by President and Mrs. Eisenhower. Other than taking a look at her greetings, Dr. Cooper was too busy to celebrate.

On her centennial anniversary, the well known educator was busy fussing around about some "material" which "they" had stuffed somewhere and she wanted it brought out so she could get on with her "book."

Dr. Cooper occupies that rambling old house in Northwest Washington which once served as the home of Frelinghuysen University.

IT WAS BACK in 1929 that Dr. Cooper became president of Frelinghuysen, a school founded in 1906, by Jesse Lawson, for Negroes who wanted to study in the evenings while working in the daytime. When the school needed a permanent site, Dr. Cooper offered her spacious home free of charge to the school and there it has lived in her memory ever since.

Having retired from the public school system where she had served over 40 years, this famed educator took on the task of teaching courses in religion, law and "academy" in the university. Prior to taking over this assignment Dr. Cooper had taught Latin at the old M Street school for four score years and served as principal from 1901 until retirement in 1906.

WHILE WORKING in this capacity she set out to make her students eligible for college scholarship awards, later having been informed that Negro students were ineligible for such scholarships. She obtained assurance from several colleges, including Harvard, Yale and Brown, to accept Negro students who were able to pass entrance examination.

As a result of this assurance, two boys from her school became the first Negroes to be accepted at Harvard without first studying at an academy.

Dr. Cooper was born in Raleigh, N.C., 100 years ago. Her father bought his freedom and that of his children. She graduated from Oberlin in 1884 where she later earned a Master's degree.

She was called to Washington as one of the first college graduates to teach at the old M Street school. Continuing her education the famed teacher received her Ph.D from Sorbonne in France in 1925. Four years later she became the President of Frelinghuysen.

SHE THEN waged a fight to have the school accredited but it never was. Although it went out of existence in the late '40's, the desk-chairs for students are still arranged in rows on the rambling porch.

The sun room still carries the sign, "Registrar." And she still considers her home as Frelinghuysen University permitting the faded and chipped sign bearing that name to remain hanging above the doorway.

Atlanta U. Dean To Explore Standard For Scholarships

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare has selected Dr. Horace Mann Bond, Dean of Education, Atlanta University, to complete his studies to determine whether standard scholarship tests are effective for finding potentially successful college students in underprivileged groups, according to a special release.

If a Government-supported scholarship program is ever adopted, the study could have an effect on the method used to select scholarship winners.

Dr. Bond, distinguished former president of Predominantly Negro Lincoln University (Pa., says preliminary research shows that underprivileged students who have scored low on intelligence and achievement tests frequently go on to achieve academic distinction.

THE FINDINGS

The findings, Bond says, suggest that the tests — which are widely used in many scholarship programs — contain unintended pitfalls for the potentially successful student from a poor background.

The result, according to Bond, is that many needy youngsters capable of doing well in college are by-passed by college scholarship programs.

Bond offers two preliminary findings to support his theory:

1. A study of Negro Ph.D. holders, many of whom as undergraduates did poorly on standard test, but went on to sustain the rigorous academic discipline, not only of undergraduate college but also of excellent graduate schools and emerge with creditable and even distinguished academic records. Followed by equally creditable and distinguished careers as scholars."

2. An analysis of the family backgrounds of the 1956 winners in the National Merit Scholarship program, a Nationwide "talent search," conducted annually for outstanding high school seniors. The tests, sponsored by the National Merit Scholarship Corp., are used to channel scholarship funds offered by numerous business firms.

The analysis, Bond stated in his application to HEW, shows that while the 1950 census lists 3,581,370 male laborers, only one scholarship winner had a laborer father. At the same time, the 2,950,850 "professional, technical and kindred workers" listed in the census produced 234 winners.

RESIDENCE A FACTOR

He added that when National Merit Scholarship winners are plotted by residence, "they tend to cluster in highly industrialized and urbanized areas, in university and college towns, and in upper-middle class suburban districts." By contrast, he adds, "few are found in counties that are underdeveloped or in depressed areas within urban areas."

In 1956 and 1957, Bond states, there were no Negro winners in the states maintaining segregated high school or in the predominantly Negro high schools in the West and North.

Bond contends, as many before him have contended, that standard tests aren't free of cultural fators; that children raised by educated parents generally have a "verbal facility" that the children of uneducated parents haven't had an opportunity to acquire.

Bond has raised the question of the validity of awarding scholarships on the basis of such standard test results.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare has awarded Bond a $31,394 research contract to continue his study while Atlanta University has contributed about $10,000 toward the project.

During the next two years Bond plans to study the backgrounds of at least 500 Negro Ph.D's, many of whom come from underprivileged backgrounds and scored low on standard tests as undergraduates.

Bond says that his goal isn't to devise a new type of test but rather to determine how the results of conventional tests, when viewed against the student's social, economic and cultural background, may be used to select youngsters who have outstanding potentials as college students.

Saved Would-Be 'Bama Governor's Wife

'Next to Ministry... The Insurance Field'

COLUMBUS, Ga. — District Manager Melvin F. Jackson of the local Atlanta Life Insurance Co. office, heartily recommends

M. F. JACKSON

. . . lauds insurance field

the insurance field to capable young men and women.

"It is one of the greatest fields," Mr. Jackson declares. "It is next to the ministry."

Mr. Jackson ought to know what he is talking about, for he has been in the insurance field for 22 years, all with Atlanta Life Insurance Co. For three of the last five years his local office has led in increased premiums. He has 18 agents on his staff, covering eight counties in the heart of the black belt.

An alumnus of Morehouse College, Mr. Jackson is a native of Macon, Ga. He has a wife and three children, is past district chairman of the American Legion, a Prince Hall Mason, a Boy Scout commissioner and a staunch member of St. James AME Church.

When disclosing his presidency of the Voters Registration Council and his treasureship of the Columbus Citizens Committee, which sparked the Primus King fight on the white primary, a most interesting observation came to light:

Some years ago, while in Clayton, Ala., Mr. Jackson saw a rattlesnake coiled and ready to strike a white woman who was in her yard. Yelling to the white woman to not move, Mr. Jackson grabbed a hoe and kill the poised snake as the woman stood frozen.

The white woman was Mrs. George Wallace, wife of Alabama segregationist Judge George Wallace of Clayton, one of the more rabid segregationists, who is now making a bid for governor of Alabama pending the Democratic primary outcome.

Southern U. biology prof wins $1,600 for study

BATON ROUGE, LA. — Dr. James M. Jay, assistant professor of biology at Southern University, has been awarded a research grant from the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, to do further study with beef. This announcement was made by Dr. Dunn Harrison, Southern University coordinator of instruction.

The $1,600 grant, which was recommended by the National Advisory Council of the National Institute of Health, gives the Southern University bacteriologist an opportunity to develop his research on antibiotic-resistant micrococci in infused beef.

THE AIM of the research is to determine whether the long range use of certain antibiotics in meats will constitute a public health problem by allowing bacteria that are found in meats to build -up resistance to them.

Dr. Jay stated, "If the bacteria can successfully build-up resistance, it would be very significant to public health authorities. However, based on previous work on antibotics as beef preservatives, this is probably unlikely." He said, "The results of this study will clarify and add to the limited amount of published information on the subject."

His previous findings have been reported in such journals as Food Technology; The Antibiotics Annual and Applied Microbiology. A member and lecturer of Sigma Xi, Dr. Jay also belongs to the Society of American. Bacterioligists; Advancement of Science and Assistant Scientist (First Lieutenant) in the Commissioned Corps of the U.S. Public Health Service.

Negro Hero at Wayne Hospital

GOLDSBORO, Feb. 7—A Negro maintenance man shed his burning clothes to stop a leak in a blazing oxygen tank and prevent what might have been a serious fire in the children's ward of Wayne Memorial Hospital last night.

Henry Skinner, 54, suffered second degree burns of the hands, face and chest before he was able to close the valve of the tank which had become ignited from a spark when his wrench slipped. He was reported recovering today.

Hospital authorities said the oxygen cylinder had been removed from a patient's room when it was found to be leaking and that Skinner had taken it to a utility room for repairs. The entire children's ward and the ward above it were evacuated within minutes after the fire occurred at 9:33 p.m.

Patients were kept in the main lobby until the smoke was cleared from the floor. Damage was confined to the oxygen cylinder and the walls of the utility room.

Oklahoma Urban League Director, Cernoria Johnson, Wins Award As State's Outstanding Social Worker

OKLAHOMA CITY. — Announcement was made last week of the awarding of a coveted scholarship to one of the state's most outstanding social workers, a woman who has won numerous honors both for herself and her community.

MRS. CERNORIA D. JOHNSON

The scholarship recipient is Mrs. Cernoria D. Johnson, executive director of the Urban League of Oklahoma City, who has been granted a $5,000 fellowship for graduate study. She is one of only seven women chosen along with 33 men to receive 1958-'59 fellowships from the Fund For Adult Education. The fund, launched by the Ford foundation, but operated independently, screened hundreds of applicants before making its recent announcements of 40 winners from 21 states. Most of the winners are educators, newspapermen and broadcasters.

Members of the Oklahoma City Urban League board of directors this week approved a one-year educational leave, beginning next September for Mrs. Johnson. She will study at Teachers college, Columbia university.

Mrs. Johnson's curriculum will include intensive study in the fields of group leadership, adult education, human behavior, community development and social work, plus possible field studies in a New York City neighborhood center.

Mrs. Johnson will be accompanied by her two daughters, Judith, 11, and Janice, 9. Her husband, William W. Johnson principal of F. D. Moon Junior High school in Oklahoma City will join hem there and do graduate study n the summer of 1959.

New York, May 2—Three senior co-eds in United Negro College fund member schools are recipients of 1958 Florina Lasker Fellowships, W. J. Trent, Jr., College Fund executive director, announced here today.

The Fellowships were initiated by the trustees of the late Florina Lasker's estate "to aid the education of Negro women." This year they were awarded to Millie Ann Fletcher, of Morris Brown College, Atlanta, Ga., Mattie Elizabeth Lynch, Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va., and Dorcas Lucretia Davis, Tuskegee Institute, Tuskegee Institute, Ala. They will receive montary assistance for their first year of study in graduate schools of their choice.

Miss Fletcher has chosen the University of California for advance studies in inorganic chemistry.

Born and educated in Atlanta, where she resides with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Fletcher of 322 Northside Drive, she attended the Walker Street Elementary and Booker T. Washington High schools. Starting as an average student, Miss Fletcher finished high school near the top of her class. "As a high school junior," Miss Fletcher states, "the sciences definitely became a part of me."

At Morris Brown Miss Fletcher majored both in chemistry and mathematics. She is listed in "Who's Who in American Universities and Colleges," and is a member of two honor societies. They are Alpha Kappa Mu and the scientific society, Beta Kappa Chi.

A native of Oak City, N. C., Miss Lynch plans to attend the University of Michigan for graduate work in organic chemistry.

The oldest of four children, she spent her early childhood on a farm. When she was ten, the family moved to Rocky Mount, N. C., where her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Bawlie G. Lynch, reside at 417 Magnolia Drive.

Miss Lynch ranks second in scholarship among senior women at Hampton. She also participates in extra-curricular activities, holding office in two major student organizations, and serving as co-chairman of the Women's Tutorial Staff.

"One day, in the high school library, I read an article on social work. I was fascinated and I began to orent myself toward the idea of being a social worker."

A social worker herself, the late Florna Lasker served as a sponsor of the UNCF Women's Division before her death in 1949. The $25,000 trust fund, from which the Fellowships are awarded, is administered by the United Negro College Fund.

WENT TO GERMANY:

Retired PO Afro America worker got Baltimore Md scholarship

BY RALPH MATTHEWS

WASHINGTON

Today, hundreds of students of all races, creeds and nationalities are going back and fourth across the oceans on student exchange programs initiated through the United Nations.

One Washingtonian enjoyed this privilege long before it became a matter of international policy.

That man was John N. Wilson of 940 T. St., NW, a retired postal employee who seized an opportunity to go to Germany as a student in 1900 when he was only 15-years of age.

THE WHOLE thing came through a happy accident coupled with the whim of an eccentric German music teacher who, while on a visit to Washington, got the idea that it would be a good advertisement for his school in Berlin to carry back a group of American colored youths.

STARTED A PRECEDENT— John N. Wilson, retired postal worker who was among the first Washingtonians to study abroad on a special scholarship provided for colored youth by a German music professor in 1900.

Mr. Wilson, while scanning the classified ads looking for a job, saw the professor's advertisement and dashed down to answer it.

The instructor, Wilhelm Pfarr offered to pay the transportation and give two years musical instruction to any lads who accepted his offer.

WILSON won his parent's consent to make the trip, along with another youth, William Taliferro, and the pair went to Germany. At that time they were quite a novelty due to the fact that few colored Americans had been seen in the empire.

Mr. Wilson was the son of the late John and Mary Bruce Wilson. His father operated a popular barber shop at 704 E. St., NW at the time.

He is a brother of Mrs. Eva Clair, widow of the late Bishop Matthew W. Clair of the Methodist church, whose son, Matthew Clair Jr., succeeded his father to the bishopric.

After mastering several musical instruments and playing in bands in the streets of Berlin and in concerts, he returned to America in 1902.

It was not until they reached New York that they discovered that what they had witnessed was a fire which had destroyed Atlantic City in one of the great tragedies of the times.

Diggs to demand equality in any U.S. scholarship grants

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — Rep. Charles C. Diggs (Dem., Mich.), Wednesday, asked the Department of Health, Education and Welfare whether it had the authority to prevent racial discrimination in the administration of the scholarship program proposed by the Eisenhower Administration.

The multi - point program would provide about 10,000 scholarships a year for four years to be allocated to the states on a population basis and, in turn, to be administered by state scholarship commissions or boards.

These scholarships would be awarded to students with good preparation in science and mathematics.

In a letter to Marion B. Folsom, secretary of health, education and welfare, Mr. Diggs sought to distinguish between the scholarship proposal and and the Federal aid to school construction bill which has been before the Congress since he has been a member.

THE MICHIGAN congressman apparently is willing to support an amendment which would deny funds to states for scholarships unless there was assurance that qualified students would not be subjected to race or religious discrimination.

In his letter to Mr. Folsom, however, Mr. Diggs said nothing about the several other programs proposed by the administration to set up a system of grants to the states to spur greater school activity, especially in the field of scientific education.

Socalled liberal members of Congress last year sought to get the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to commit itself to deny Federal funds for school construction administratively to states or school districts which were not complying with the Supreme Court decision against segregated schools.

IF THE department had done that, they hoped that they would be relieved from voting on an amendment to the school construction bill sponsored by Rep. A. Clayton Powell (Dem., N.Y.), to deny such funds to school districts which were still maintaining segregated schools.

Mr. Powell has already announced his intention to offer an anti segregation amendment to all education proposals which are brought before the House at this session of Congress.

When the bill to provide Federal aid for school construction was before the House last July, Mr. Diggs joined with Rep. James Roosevelt (Dem., Calif.), in opposing the Powell amendment.

After Mr. Roosevelt explained his position on the school segregation issue, Mr. Diggs told the House:

"After considerable deliberation, it is my opinion that the objective we seek, to provide a remedy in school segregation cases, can best be achieved by means other than an appropriate amendment to this bill."

The Michigan congressman called his position "a strategic withdrawal" from using the presently proposed school construction measure as a vehicle to supplement that decision.

* * *

"I FOR ONE," he added, "am willing to utilize other means to settle this question in order that the American people, regardless of color, who are concerned with the shortage of classrooms in this country can examine the record after the vote on this bill and determine who is for and who is against this proposal without any complications."

The next day Rep. Stuyvesant Wainwright (Rep., N.Y.), in the absence of Mr. Powell, offered an amendment providing that no Federal funds for school construction shall be granted to any local educational agency operating school facilities in violation of the Supreme Court decision against segregated schools.

Mr. Diggs opposed the Wainwright amendment. He told the House "I am for the bill and I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Wainwright) does not carry."

ON A teller vote, the Wainwright amendment was adopted, 136 to 105, but Mr. Diggs was one of the 105 members of the House who voted against it.

In his letter Wednesday to Mr. Folsom, Mr. Diggs said:

"In my opinion, the motive behind the scholarship program puts this type of Federal aid to education in an entirely different light.

"Surely there should be no legitimate objection to assuring students who meet the general requirements for the proposed scholarships that they would not be discriminated against in any way by reason of race, creed, color or national origin, considering their importance to national defense."

He asked Mr. Folsom:

1. WHETHER the Department of Health, Education and Welfare has the authority to prevent race and religious discrimination in the proposed scholarship program.

2. If not, what amendment would be recommended to give the agency such authority.

3. Whether he (Folsom) would support such an amendment.

Mr. Folsom told a news conference at the time he announced the administration's education program that he hoped the segregation issue would not arise.

To Bear Witness Before The Church

Religious Study Award Won Here

Rufus Wilson II, a second year student at Gammon Theological Seminary and a native Atlantan, has received word that he has been selected one of the recipients of the Senior Honors Scholarships for 1958-59.

This grant of $1,000 is provided by the Lilly Endowment with recipients chosen by a committee of the American Association of Theological Schools. The primary purpose of these scholarships, now awarded for the first time, is "to permit recipients to be full time students in the last year of theological school and to bear witness before the church and the world to the importance of theological study as the vocation for this period of life."

Mr. Wilson came to Gammon from the background of industrial chemistry, leaving a fine position as analytical chemist in the Phosphate Development Works Laboratory at the TVA Center, Wilson Dam, Ala.

MR. AND MRS. WILSON

Mr. Wilson is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Wilson, Sr., of 65 Little Street, S.E., Atlanta. He graduated from Booker T. Washington High School and received his B.Sc. degree from Clark College in 1952. At Clark he was a member of Alpha Phi Alpha and of Iota Beta chemical fraternity. He was elected into membership of Beta Kappa Chi, National Science Honorary Society. He also held various offices in scientific organization at Clark and received many honors there in his chosen field of study.

After graduation Mr. Wilson was hired as a member of the research staff of Zep Manufacturing Company of Atlanta. The Atlanta Daily World of January 29, 1953, in a story of the event, said, "Zep Manufacturing Company announced today the appointment of a 25-year-old Clark College graduate to its scientific and technical staff as a chemist and chemical plant operator. Rufus Wilson thus becomes one of the first Negroes to crack the lucrative industrial chemistry field in the South."

EVENING STAFF

During Mr. Wilson's first year at Gammon he was on the evening school staff of Booker T. Washington High School and was also engaged in field work at Carrie Steele-Pitt Children's Home. Mr. Wilson was married in 1955 to Verdell Morse, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Morse, of 556 Margaret Mitchell Drive, N.E.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are parents of a baby daughter. They are members of the South Atlanta Methodist Church.

SCHOLAR -- Joe N. Gayles, Jr., a senior chemistry major at Dillard University, has been awarded a coveted Woodrow Wilson Fellowship for graduate study. Blind Negro Assumes Role Of Teacher At Talladega

Education B-4-B
Mon. 3-24-58
Montgomery
Ala.

TALLADEGA — A blind girl who was the first non-sighted person ever to graduate from Westside High School, and was valedictorian of the class, is practicing teaching at the Alabama School for Negro Blind.

Miss Thora Louise Dudley is the first blind Negro teacher in the state.

As she herself attended the Alabama School for Blind she believes that "I am especially fortunate to be permitted to do my practice teaching where my foundation for an education was laid."

After graduating from Westside Miss Dudley was able to go to college through the efforts of the state Rehabilitation Service.

She entered Talladega College in the fall of 1954, the service financing reader service, books, tuition, room and board for the freshman year.

"Through the generosity of friends, Talladega community and Talladega College, some help from the state Rehabilitation Service and some additional aid from a group of Federated Clubs of Montgomery, I hope to earn a B.A. degree from Talladega College, June 2, 1958," she said. I cannot forget the help coming from my cousin, Mrs. Vidia Harris.

"Each year I have made the Dean's list."

"I am a student counselor, and am one of seven seniors girls chosen to live in the honor house.

"I am a member of the college choir, of the YMCA, little theater, A.K.A. sorority and the Future Teachers of America."

Miss Dudley spent seven years with her family reaching the ninth grade at the School for the Blind.

'OPPORTUNITY OFFERED'

"Upon the reorganization of the School for the Blind in which the deaf and blind students were separated, I returned and became a client of the adjustment center, the first summer of its operation.

"The center offered an opportunity for the blind to learn handicraft, Braille, travel, typing, sewing and cooking, and how to meet the demands for daily living.

"This experience was the turning point in my life as far as education is concerned.

"As a result of the test given by the psychiatrist, I was advised to continue my schooling to participate in an experiment to integrate the blind with the sighted in the public schools in Alabama."

During the time between her ninth grade work at the School for the Blind and her return to the Adjustment Center, she kept reading and studying.

She obtained books in Braille from the Library of Congress—"Life of Lincoln," "Making Home Happy," and magazines "that not only helped to keep up my interesting reading and education but helped to strengthen my belief in my possibilities."

Miss Dudley was born on a large plantation in South Alabama, a member of a family consisting of five children, three orphaned cousins, her parents and two grandparents.

"We were tenant farmers and moved every year or so because we never made enough to pay out.

"My eyes had been bad from birth and in spite of the numerous home remedies, or, because my parents, acting on the advice of neighbors, refused to use a doctor's prescription, I began losing my sight at the age of four.

FATHER'S DEATH SETBACK

"The death of my father completely undermined my sense of security.

"Because I was blind he was especially kind and patient with me and I loved him dearly.

"Somehow he had heard that help for the blind could be obtained in Birmingham and so he always encouraged me by promising, when he got able, he would take me where I could get this help.

"There was no one to stay at the house with me so I trudged to school each day with the other small children.

"The teacher was good enough to let me remain although I was not of school age.

"That is how I learned the alphabet and numbers and after committed the lessons to memory.

"When permitted I could recite as well as the sighted children."

"When I was seven years old we moved into a neighborhood where there was a man whose niece was attending the school for the deaf at Talladega; and hope sprung anew.

"When this girl returned to the Alabama School for the Deaf and Blind, I accompanied her.

"After a year of learning rhymes and counting on a pegboard I began my lessons in Braille.

"Because I like to read rapidly, I soon exhausted the fairy tales, history books, and operas every child should know.

"Before I was 12, not only could I read the Bible in Braille, but had to teach the smaller children to read, to learn verses, and sometimes I composed little verses for them.

MUSIC

"Music was easy for me and so I learned to both sing and play the piano.

"When asked how I feel concerning being so near the end of the road of getting an A.B. degree, I'd like to borrow some of the works from Eugene O'Neal's play. 'To me, it seems that I have come a long journey out of darkness to the dawn of day.' The credit is not mine. Rather it goes to God, one who made a way out of no way. Faith in God in human nature and in myself kept me going when the times seemed darkest."

Other scholarships, sponsored by business firms and friends of the college, range from $100 to $1,000 per year. The Honorary Directors association sponsors a grant-in-aid program for 40 to 50 needy students each year in addition to the scholarship program inaugurated in 1957.

In addition to the scholarship and grant-in-aid program, Rockhurst operates a placement office which finds part-time employment for several hundred students each year without fee.

Seniors wishing to take the April 5 examinations should make advance reservation by calling or writing the office of the dean.

The 42nd academic year at Rockhurst will begin September 11, first day of the freshman orientation program. The annual summer session will begin June 10. Freshman, transfer and advanced standing students are admitted at both times, and the April 5 entrance examinations apply to both.

Jones cops 'Inquirer' 2-mile run

Jenkins nips Culbreath; Gilbert noses Pratt.

By GEORGE LYLE JR.

PHILADELPHIA (NNPA) — Charles (Deacon) Jones, Iowa State, turned on the heat to win the Lawson Robertson two-mile run going away, at the 14th annual Inquirer Charities track meet held at Convention Hall, Friday, setting a new record of 8:58.6 before an overflow crowd of 10,650.

Jones, who hails from St. Paul and Father Flanagan's Boys Town, defeated a pair of Houston University runners, John Macy and Jerry Smartt and Velisa Mugosa of Yugoslavia as he paced himself beautifully, taking command in the last quarter-mile and winning by a 25-yard margin.

CHARLEY JENKINS, late of Villanova, copped his fourth straight Sage 600 as he set the pace and was never headed, although former Morgan Stater, Josh Culbreath, was on his heels at the finish line. Jenkins was clocked in 1:12.5; Culbreath in 1:12.6.

In the 50-yard high hurdles, which pitted Elias Gilbert, Charles Pratt, Willie Stevens and Henry Johnson, saw Gilbert edge Pratt for the second straight year in 6.1 while Ira Murchison also snatched his second straight win in 5.3 as he outlegged Bobby Brown, former Northeast High (Philadelphia) lad who is now a freshman at Penn State.

Running in the John Borican Memorial 1000, Harry Bright of the New York Pioneer Club was nosed out in the home stretch and could do no better than fourth.

* * *

THE PIONEER Club did all right in the Club Relay as the foursome of Phipps, Tucker, Bowen and the ageless Reggie Pearman, running from scratch, romped home a five yard winner over the Shanahan Club which had a 40-yard handicap.

Morgan's freshman relay team ran into hard luck as the second man, Dennis Hicks, was bumped on the second turn, dropping the baton which rolled under the edge of the track.

In the feature mile, Morgan was pressed to hold third behind Villanova and Manhattan, all three runners finishing in a blanket wind-up.

* * *

IN THE field events, John Gray of Penn finished in a five-way tie at 14 feet for fourth in the pole vault.

In the high jump George Dennis and Floyd Smith tied for first at 6-7, while Bob Barksdale, along with two others, tied for third with a leap of 6-5. Phila Reavis of Villanova who was favored, did not compete.

In the high school section Haverford High, Lincoln of Jersey City, West Philadelphia and West Catholic were winners of their respective events.

The registrar of a Mississippi college, who worked a puzzle only at the urging of his wife, is $1,200 richer today.

A check for that amount has been sent A. C. Carpenter of Lorman, Miss., 36-year-old employe of Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical College. On his first effort, he worked last week's Prizewords correctly and won the money that had been building up for several weeks.

Mr. Carpenter said puzzles have never interested him; his wife is a puzzle fan who has only one matching the master entered The Commercial Appeal's Prizewords contest many times.

Idle Jottings Net $1,200

Mr. Carpenter said he is going to split the $1,200 with his wife "because without her prodding I wouldn't have entered the contest at all." They agreed that the big prize will come in handy —he to pay off educational debts at Indiana University, she to help defray their daughter's school expenses.

"My wife won't have as much trouble getting me interested in contests, especially Prizewords, as she did before," Mr. Carpenter admitted.

The new Prizewords puzzle on Page Two of The Commercial Appeal this morning is worth $200. Thursday at 1 p.m. is the deadline for submitting entries.

A grandmother will have her day at City College next Wednesday. And a sizable delegation of Mrs. Bessie Minor Johnson's nine children and ten grandchildren will be there to applaud her achievements.

Mrs. Johnson, a 60-year-old Bronx school teacher, will receive a Master of Science degree in education at the college's 112th commencement in Lewisohn Stadium.

The degree represents eight years of study in the afternoons and evenings, the only time Mrs. Johnson could spare from teaching and household duties.

In her youth, Mrs. Johnson taught school in Virginia and Maryland. She stopped teaching in 1920 when she married Robert Johnson, a graduate of Virginia Union University. He is now a postal worker.

As her family began to grow, Mrs. Johnson's hopes for a college degree receded. In 1943, with the children better able to take care of themselves, she enrolled at City College for a bachelor's degree. She was graduated in 1950, decided to return to teaching and started to do graduate work.

The master's is the twelfth graduate and undergraduate degree already earned by the Johnsons and their nine children. A son and daughter are working toward graduate degrees.

Mrs. Johnson will continue teaching until she reaches retirement age.

MASTER'S DEGREE — Reginald Wendell Bennett of Manassas, Va., received the master's degree in bacteriology at University of Pittsburgh's commencement exercises.

Federal Scholarship Plans Are Approved

U. S. Aid-To-Education Program Will Provide 20,000 Scholarships

By WILMOT HERCHER

WASHINGTON (AP)—A federal aid - to - education program which would provide more than 20,000 college scholarships annually was approved by a Senate subcommittee Monday.

The bill is aimed chiefly at strengthening the nation's scientific brainpower by improving teaching methods and encouraging gifted students. It covers many of the recommendations made to Congress by President Eisenhower last January.

Sen. Lister Hill (D-Ala) said his full Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare will consider the legislation Wednesday. He predicted the Senate would pass the bill before Congress adjourns.

A similar bill has been approved by a House subcommittee and is now awaiting clearance by the House Rules Committee.

WOULD COST HALF BILLION

The Senate subcommittee left it up to the full committee to decide on the duration of the program. If the four - year period provided in the House bill is accepted the total cost would be about 1½ billion dollars.

A federal grant of money for about 23,000 college scholarships each year would be provided by both bills. The states would be given full control in awarding the scholarships.

The Senate group added 75 million dollars annually for general teachers' institutes. This activity would be administered by the U.S commissioner of education.

The commissioner would contract with colleges and universities to operate short term or regular session institutes for public elementary and high school teachers

WOULD BE PAID

The teachers would study the subject matter they are teaching or preparing to teach. They would be paid stipends while attending the institutes, including allowances for dependents and for travel to the institutes and back to their homes.

Sponsors of the bill explained these institutes were designed to cover general subjects and to raise the level of teaching clear across the curriculum.

This general institutes provision is in addition to a special section of the House bill creating similar institutes to improve foreign language teaching and also in addition to programs operated by the National Science Foundation to improve science and mathematics instruction.

Also added in the Senate measure was 20 million annually for vocational education. Both versions contain 40 million dollars for loans to college students in the first year. This would be in addition to a 17½-million-dollar scholorship fund in the first year of operation.

Both bills contain 65 million annually for grants to states to strengthen science, mathematics and language instruction in public schools.

U. S. Educational Aid Is Set at $887 Million; Scholarships Killed

United Press International

A House-Senate conference agreed yesterday on a compromise $887,400,000 program of Federal aid to education, after killing off President Eisenhower's proposal of Federal college scholarships to bright students.

The compromise, designed to help meet space-age education needs, must now be approved by both houses before it goes to the President for his signature.

Senate conferees yielded to House insistence on no outright Federal scholarships. But they accepted a House program of loans to needy students, which could total about $295 million over a four-year period.

In addition to the student-loan program, the bill would provide for post-graduate fellowships, improved teacher education and Federal help in purchase of science-teaching aids.

Total spending called for in the compromise was fairly close to the House-approved figure. The Senate bill, including the scholarship program, carried a price tag of $1.3 billion. It would have provided 23,000 Federal scholarships of $250 a year for bright college students.

Chairman Lister Hill (D-Ala.) of the Senate conferees said the compromise had "many good provisions" but fell far short of what he originally wanted. He predicted Senate action on it today.

Rep. Carl Elliott (D-Ala.), a House conferee, told newsmen he thought "we have an excellent bill."

The student-loan program would authorize loans up to $1000 a year at 3 per cent interest, administered by the colleges and the Federal Commissioner of Education.

The program would cost an estimated $47.5 million for the first year, $75 million the second year, $82.5 million the third year and $90 million the fourth year.

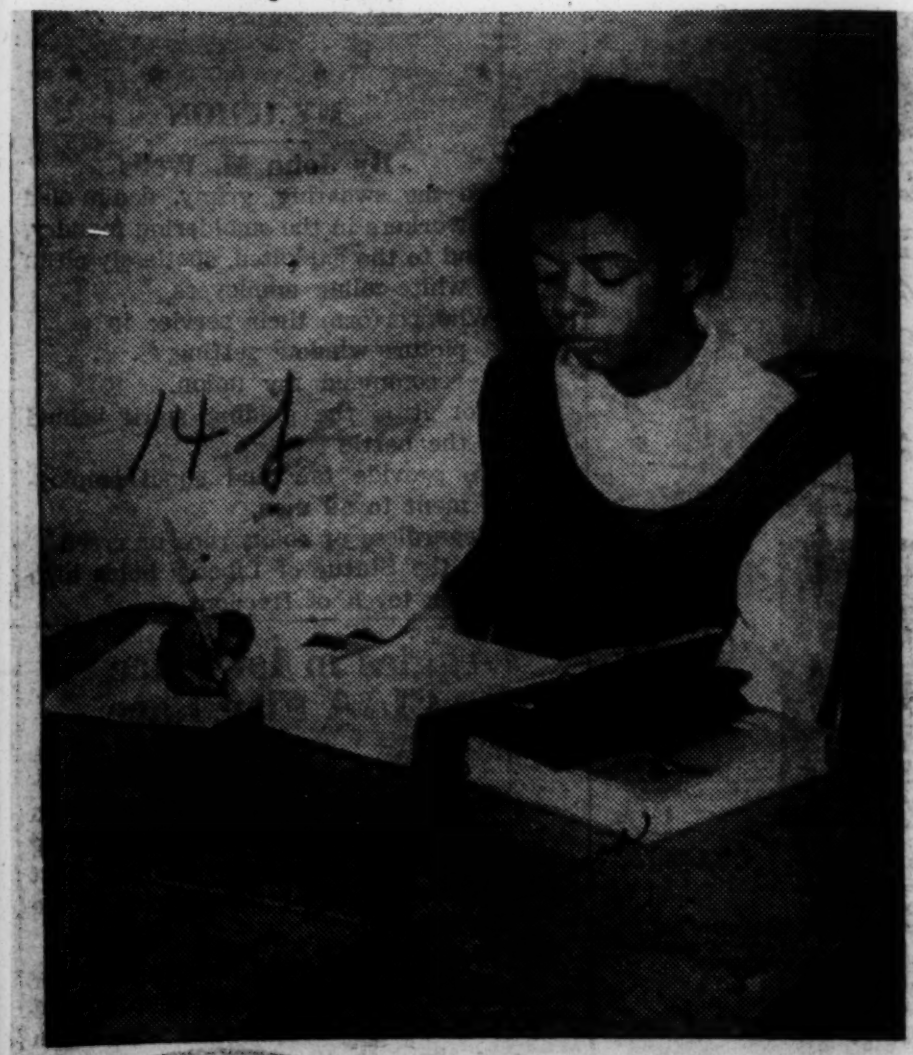
MARIAN ANDERSON

Marian Anderson Gets New Degree

NEW YORK — Marian Anderson, world renowned contralto singer, was one of eight public figures to receive an honorary degree on June 4 at the 120th commencement exercises at New York University. She was awarded the honorary doctor of music degree.

Miss Anderson, who bears with grace and humility the richest honors of the far reaches of the earth, glorified commencement for New York University in a fashion that will long outlive the witness of those present. Born in obscurity and reared in adversity from early youth her phenomenal vocal talent and determined effort destined her for eminence. First it was the mites of friends and neighbors, and later the substantial grants of discerning scholarship agencies, that contributed to her training at home and abroad. Endowed with innate spiritual force lending ecstatic fervor to "a voice of a century" as Toscanini pronounced it, this woman of superlative gifts has become almost legendary in her own lifetime. As an emissary of the U. S. State Department in extended foreign travel she has proved one of the most effective ambassadors of good will this nation ever commissioned.



Elizabeth Eckford, 15-year-old student at Little Rock's Central High School, has received word that she has been awarded a $1,000 Scholarship by the Joint Council of Dining Car Employes, with headquarters in Chicago. GEORGE MILLER (PRODIGY)

BOY 13, IS TAKING COLUMBIA COURSE

Future Diplomat Will Take Exam This Week, Then Return to High School

A 13-year-old boy will complete a summer course in American history at Columbia University this week. He hopes to enter college as a regular student next year and to become a diplomat sometime thereafter.

The boy, George Miller, is a slight, bespectacled North Carolinian who isn't the least bit awed by college students or professors.

Prof. Arthur W. Thompson, who teaches the course George is taking, called him "a very alert individual." "He is not afraid to ask questions and they are usually the right questions at the right time," the professor said.

George was admitted to the summer session as a special student on the recommendation of his high school principal in Mooresville, N. C., and with the permission of Professor Thompson. Dr. Thomas C. Izard, director of the summer session, noted that George "is the youngest student we have had in the summer session, as far as I can remember."

After he takes his final examination Friday, George will return to Mooresville to complete his final year of high school. He hasn't yet decided on a college, but he has the Ivy League schools in mind. The cost of college will be no problem, since George recently won $20,000 on a television quiz program.

10,000 Vie For Scholarships

Ten thousand high school seniors were one step closer Wednesday to merit scholarships and other awards valued at five million dollars when the National Merit Scholarship Corp. named the semi-finalists in this year's competition.

The select group outscored 479,000 other students in the national merit scholarship qualifying test, the NMSC's nation-wide educational measuring stick. The test was given April 26.

The semi-finalists will face on Dec. 6 another three-hour exam, the scholastic aptitude test of the college entrance examination board. Those who pass this test will be classified as finalists.

735 WINNERS

NMSC President John M. Stalnaer predicted that more than 95 per cent of the candidates would pass the second hurdle and become finalists.

As finalists, the students will be eligible for about five million dollars in scholarship awards sponsored by more than 80 business and industrial organizations, professional societies, foundations, and individuals, and the NMSC.

Stalnaker said that about the beginning of May, 735 students will be named merit scholars of 1959. Each will receive a four-year award covering four years in college, plus a stipend tailored to the winner's needs.

MERIT WINNER FINDS TENACITY PAYS DIVIDENDS

Studies Far Beyond His Assignments

BY CLAY GOWRAN

(Seventh and last article in a series about National Merit scholarship winners in the Chicago area.)

Aaron Douglas, 18, used just one word to explain why he thought he had won the Merit scholarship which will enable him to enter the University of Chicago this fall. The word was "tenacity."

Douglas, who was among six winners from Evanston Township High school, told his story in the small, bare apartment at 2122 Ashland av., in the suburb, which is home to him and his mother, Mrs. Tommie Douglas, 42. His father died when the boy was an infant.

"I had tenacity, I guess," Aaron said. "That is about the only reason I can give for winning.

Study "Pays Off"

"Thru the years of high school, I've spent 5½ to 6 hours each night studying. I usually come home from school, sleep until dinner time, then start work about 7 p. m. or so. I always work until midnight or later, and it has paid off."

Why does he spend so much time studying?

"Well, I don't just work on the assignments they give us, and on the school textbooks," he said. "I like to go into things more deeply. I get books on the subjects from the library, and also borrow others. In physics, which I like best, I've borrowed books from a teacher, and they help me a lot."

Mrs. Douglas said she just didn't understand where her boy got his ability. She, she said, had nothing to do with it.

Makes Way on His Own

"He has made his way on his own," Mrs. Douglas said. "I had only an eighth grade education, and since he was a baby I've had to go out each day and do housework for our living, altho Aaron helps by doing yard work.

"He's done so well, but he works so hard at it. Why, that boy sometimes reads all night."

Young Douglas is not sure, now, what he will major in at Chicago, but it will be either physics or philosophy—"those are the things I am most curious about." Probably, he said, he will try to become a professor when his education is completed.

"If I hadn't received the scholarship I wouldn't have been able to go to college, and I think I would have become a postman," Aaron said. "They have time to do things they want to do, that's why I had been thinking about it. Such a job would have given me time to study and think."

Attends Summer School

Aaron will go to Chicago with an excellent high school foundation for the coming advanced studies. For two years during his stay at Evanston High, he attended summer school in order to fit in all of the subjects he wanted.

The result is this impressive array of credits: 4½ years of mathematics thru calculus and advanced geometry, and five years of science, including college level physics, in addition to the required courses in English, foreign language, and social studies taken by all students.

He has an equally impressive array of extracurricular activities. He won an honorable mention in Westinghouse Electric corporation's high school science talent search, he won a prize for his science excellence from the Bausch and Lomb Optical company, he played baseball in his freshman and sophomore years, he was editor of the school handbook last year, he worked on the yearbook staff and he belongs to the writers' club.

In Top 3 Per Cent

He is in the top 3 per cent of his high school class, despite the fact that he was absent from school 42 days last year because of illness.

Why is he so curious about physics and philosophy?

"They seem associated in my mind," he replied slowly. "There is a religious quality here—the basic structure and thought of the world and the universe, the search into unknowns. That is what I want."

Little Rock

Conscience Fund Award To Green

NEW YORK — The National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students has granted the first supplementary scholarship award from the American Conscience Fund to Ernest Green, the first Negro graduated from Central High School in Little Rock, Ark.

"This award, together with 52 similar awards totaling about $17,000 were made available this year to outstanding Negro high school seniors," John U. Monro, Chairman of the Trustees of the Supplementary Scholarship Fund of NSSFNS and Director of the Financial Aid Office at Harvard, announced.

"These awards," Monro said, "are going to students from 21 states including those in the south and the District of Columbia. They are the final link in the chain of financial assistance needed over and above college scholarships, family contributions, and the students earnings and savings.

Ernest Green, for example, has already received a full tuition scholarship from Michigan State university. The American Conscience Fund award will provide for all his other expenses not covered by his summer earnings and his family's contribution.

18 OTHER GRANTS

Eighteen additional students have received "recognitions of merit" (without stipend) from NSSFNS, because their full financial needs had already been met, largely as a result of the NSSFNS efforts in their behalf."

This year's recipients of supplementary scholarships have already won, because of their academic promise, $81,000 in scholarship aid from 61 colleges and universities across the nation, including Antioch, Brown, Barnard, Case Institute of Technology, Columbia university, Lehigh, Michigan State university, University of Missouri, Oberlin, Pomona, Radcliffe, and Rutgers university.

The annual supplementary grants are the culmination of the National Scholarship Service's over-all effort to seek out and help talented Negro seniors to continue their education. Without NSSFNS guidance and financial aid, these students might otherwise not develop their full potential.

Money for these awards is provided by a number of individual funds and is used not only to aid these new college freshmen but to continue to assist previous award winners throughout their college years. Awards to upperclassmen will be announced in early August.

Among the funds contributing, is the American Conscience Fund which began as the result of a letter to the New York Times last fall from Professor William Van Til of New York university. It ended, for this year, in New Rochelle, New York through the Good Friday and Passover collections of the city's churches and synagogues, respectively, to help Negro children, like those in Little Rock, weather the "stormy transition."

Some others are: the Old Dominion Fund earmarked for candidates in cities where the NSSFNS COMMUNITY TALENT SEARCH program either has been adopted or is being considered; the Jean Tennyson Foundation, Inc., for music students; and the Camille and Henry Dreygus Fund, for students majoring in science mathematics.

NATIONAL SCHOLARSHIP SERVICE FUND or engineering.

DELTAS, OMEGAS

Funds have also been established by the Delta Sigma Theta Sorority and the Omega Phi Psi Fraternity.

In NSSFNS's ten-year history, the agency's counseling service have helped more than 5200 Negro students enter over 350 interracial colleges and universities. Total scholarship aid of almost $2,000,000 was secured by NSSFNS for these students. Of this $1,670,000 came from colleges and other sources, $330,000 in direct supplementary grants.

As vital as the funds themselves are the efforts of NSSFNS counselors who work with high schools and colleges in discovering talented students and paving the way for their continued education. This year NSSFNS counselors screened more than 1700 high school seniors of whom at least 700 will be attending interracial colleges in September with more than $300,000 in scholarship awards.

"It is difficult," said Richard L. Plaut, President of the National Scholarship Service, "to single out examples of outstanding former NSSFNS counselees and scholars from so many. There is, for instance, this year, Alice Wilson of New Orleans, a music education major who was graduated this June from Illinois Wesleyan university, in Bloomington, Ill. She returns to Bloomington this fall as a junior high school music teacher, the first Negro teacher in the Bloomington school system.

"Another, Leonard Jeffries, jr., of Newark, New Jersey, a pre-law senior at Lafayette college, was elected the first Negro president of his fraternity. Jeffries also received substantial scholarship aid from the Jessie Smith Noyes Foundation.

"Bessye Warren of Houston, Tex., majoring in government, graduated cum laude from Radcliffe this June.

"NSSFNS advice and help gave these, as well as thousands of others, the encouragement they needed to go on to college. But there are many more thousands of potentially qualified college candidates in our junior high schools who never reach college and whom we are most concerned about now.

"We are just beginning to tap the enormous resources of talent among deprived children who can be rescued through programs like COMMUNITY TALENT SEARCH launched by NSSFNS last year.

"The pilot project for CTS was started two years ago, under the co-sponsorship of the New York City Board of Education, the College Entrance Examination Board, and NSSFNS at Junior High school 43 and George Washington High school here in New York. A second project will get underway this fall in Washington, D. C.

"We hope," Plaut concluded, "that by giving able students in their formative years, both the desire and the opportunity, in the form of special services, to continue to study, a great many college-trained students will emerge from groups from which few have come in the past."

Besides Green, other recipients are: Bennie L. Coleman, Montgomery, Ala.; Pennsylvania State university Park, Pa.; Carroll P. Draughn, Washington, D. C., Bard college, Annadale-on-the-Hudson, N. NSSFNS HAS recently extended its program through Community Talent Search, a national project to help communities set up their own talent searching projects. An excellent example of the potential of such projects has been underway for two years in JHS 43 and George Washington high school in New York City. This pilot project is cosponsored by the New York City Board of Education, the College Entrance Examination Board, and NSSFNS.

It is serving as a laboratory for developing methods of spotting and encouraging children with college potential long before they reach the final years of high school when it is often too late. The emphasis is on children from culturally and economically deprived groups, regardless of race, to whom the idea of college would not ordinarily occur. Washington, D. C. will be the first city, other than New York, to launch such a project at its Macfarland junior high school and Roosevelt high school.

The students were Harold Haizlip of Washington, D. C., Amherst '57, now studying for his doctorate at Harvard under a Woodrow Wilson fellowship; Robert Hood, of Louisville, Ky., Ohio Wesleyan '56, now a ministerial student at the Union Theological seminary; Leonard Jeffries, of Newark, New Jersey, Lafayette college '58, and Rodney Dennis, of Tampa, Florida, New York university '58.

Harry J. Carman, dean emeritus of Columbia college and chairman of the board of directors of NSSFNS, served as chairman for the evening. Frank H. Bowles, president of the college entrance examination board, gave the principal address. His subject was: "The NSSFNS Role in American Education — The Past Ten Years and The Next.'

The unique Scholarship Service, with headquarters at 6 East 82nd Street, New York City, was started in 1948 after Dean Carman, Mrs. Felice N. Schwartz, and the Reverend James H. Robinson studied the results of two separate research surveys made by Mrs. Schwartz.

How It Started

The first revealed that although Negroes made up about ten percent of the nation's total population, they accounted for less than one percent of the interracial college enrollment.

The second study indicated that hundreds of colleges and universities in the North would welcome applications from qualified Negroes and offered millions of dollars in scholarship aid for deserving students for which Negroes were equally eligible with all other applicants. Shortly after the incorporation of NSSFNS, the agency was placed under the direction of Richard L. Plaut who has been responsible for the conduct of its program from that time to the present.

Starting slowly, NSSFNS began seeking out Negro high school students of college caliber who could not afford to continue their education. With the cooperation of non-segregated colleges and universities (185 college presidents now serve on the NSSFNS Advisory Board of College Presidents), the organization started matching able students with available college admission opportunities and scholarships. Where necessary and possible, NSSFNS made supplementary awards.

Counseling To 1600

Steadily the number of students helped has grown until now about 1600 Negro candidates are given counseling each year. Of these 600 to 700 start college annually with financial aid secured through NSSFNS services.

Whenever possible, NSSFNS also awards supplementary scholarships in amounts up to $400 a year drawn from the agency's own funds. Since its inception, the organization has secured approximately $1,600,000 for students from colleges and other sources in scholarship grants, including $300,000 in supplementary help.

But as time went on, NSSFNS officials realized that their program of helping exceptional Negro high school seniors go on to college was not solving the basic problem of fully developing the huge manpower potential to be found in all the nation's deprived groups.

A first step towards the earlier identification of potential college students took the form of a limited preparatory school program that through the years has resulted in the enrollment of several hundred students in 40 of the nation's leading independent schools with thousands of dollars worth of scholarship aid, mostly from the schools. Highlights of this program have been the outstanding college records of these preparatory school graduates as well as the placement of the first Negro students in a number of the schools.

A Southern Project

This need for earlier identification and educational counseling was driven forcefully home in 1954 and 1955 when NSSFNS undertook its two-year Southern project made possible by a grant from the Fund for the Advancement of Education. The project proved that many Negroes from inferior, segregated schools in the deepest South could succeed academically in northern colleges if given the chance—of 523 Southern project students only 31 have left college for academic reasons.

But the Southern project also showed that the 12th grade was far too late to start seeking out potential college material when the cultural and economic family background of these youngsters had conditioned them to the idea that college and a real chance to better themselves was impossible.

"We found that life-long poverty, little family interest and encouragement, and a neighborhood which sneers at good grades and college dreams can effectively dim the spark of many potentially great scientists, teachers, or businessmen long before we meet the students as high school seniors," says Mr. Plaut.

"So we hypothesized that pilot projects in the early identification and educational development of able Junior high school students, from deprived areas, would effectively demonstrate that many more youngsters could be uncovered who might achieve college success. A collateral gain would be the development of additonal trained manpower from all deprived groups, regardless of race."

To Junior High Level

In 1956, NSSFNS incorporated this hypothesis into its basic policy by proposing and helping to launch a demonstration project at Junior high school No. 32 and George Washington high school in Manhattan.

Now nearing the end of its second year, the six-year project is scheduled to continue until 1962. Co-sponsored by the New York city board of education, the College Entrance Examination Board and NSSFNS, the project is concerned with about 750 students in last year's seventh, eighth and ninth grades.

Mostly from deprived homes, the students are Negro, Puerto Rican, and white. After early identification through both convention and experimental methods, those showing promise receive intensive guidance, cultural and educational enrichment, and remedial teaching, where necessary.

Almost equally important, their parents are being coached in ways to help the children at home and are being encouraged to participate actively in school affairs. These children will continue to be given special attention and smaller classes through their years in George Washington high school.

The measure of the project's success will be a comparison of their future life patterns (partiticularly the number going on to college) with pre-project JHS. N. 43 graduates.

A Search For Talent

With this pioneer effort as a pilot and with the help of a grant from the Old Dominion Foundation, NSSFNS has started a national program called COMMUNITY TALENT SEARCH to assist other communities to identify and develop able children from underprivileged groups, regardless of race or creed. COMMUNITY TALENT SEARCH is directed by Dr. Franklin J. Keller, formerly Principal of Metropolitan Vocational and Performing Arts High Schools in New York City.

Interest in CTS, however, has not dimmed the original NSSFNS objective of helping Negro high school seniors attain higher educational opportunities. NSSFNS staff members visit some 150 college campuses, as well as many high schools, annually seeking out talented students and ways to help them. As a result, this September another several hundred NSSFNS proteges will be enrolling at leading colleges.

The new college students will have a brilliant record to live up to. A survey of the academic progress of Southern Project students and scholarship holders, for example, shows that ten percent have had a scholastic average of A or A—and 60 percent achieved an average of B or B-.

Only six percent of these students helped by NSSFNS have withdrawn from college for academic reasons, and nine percent for other reasons. The record of these Negro students as a group is far superior to the national average which shows about a 40 percent drop-out rate from all causes.

Student Honors Many

NSSFNS student honors have been many. Nathaniel LaMar, for example, was helped by NSSFNS to enroll first in Phillips Exeter academy—to complete his secondary school education, and then at Harvard. La Mar went on to graduate summa cum laude from Harvard, have two stories published in The Atlantic Monthly, at the age of 21, and win a fellowship at Cambridge university in England. He is now finishing his first novel to be published by Atlantic, Little Brown, Inc.

The Scholarship Service's impressive record and decade of service was reviewed. at its anniversary dinner on April 29. Dean Carman expresses the feelings of all who have had a hand in NSSFNS' growth when he said:

"Ten years ago NSSFNS was conceived in the minds of a few of us who felt that far too many promising young Americans were being deprived of the education to which they were entitled. Now we find ourselves at the forefront of a great national awakening.

"More and more people have

Dr. Browne, the daughter of Mrs. L. J. Lee of 1106 Mississippi, attended LeMoyne College and Howard University before receiving her master's and doctor's degrees from the University of Michigan.

Her research will be in certain areas of new mathematics and their applications to management and behavioral sciences.

$8,800 awards to Dr. Browne for UCLA study

DURHAM, N.C. — Dr. Marjorie Lee Browne, professor of mathematics and chairman of North Carolina College's mathematics department, has been awarded a National Science Faculty Fellowship of $8,800 for twelve months of post doctoral study at the University of California at Los Angeles.

In addition to the stipend, the grant includes round trip travel, and $600.00 to cover other program expenses.

A NATIVE OF Memphis, Tenn., where she finished LeMoyne High School, Dr. Browne received the B. S. degree (cum laude) from Howard University, and the M.S. and Ph.D. degress from the University of Michigan.

She is the daughter of Mr. L. J. Lee, 1106 Mississippi Avenue, Memphis.

Dr. Browne says she will "pursue an independent program of study and research in certain areas of new mathematics and their applications to management and behavioral sciences."

ALAN T. WATERMAN, director of the NSF program, announcing Dr. Browne's award said, "The primary purpose of these awards is to provide an opportunity for college and university science teachers to enhance their effectiveness as teachers; the fellowships, therefore, are not thought of as designed to provide support for research projects as such.

"Science Faculty Fellows will be selected on their potential and demonstrated ability as teachers of science. It should be borne in mind that in the selection of a Fellow emphasis will be placed on two factors: (1) the individual's record as a science teacher, and (2) his ability to improve his teaching competence by carrying out his proposed "Activities Program."

"DR. BROWNE'S selection was based upon an evaluation panel of persons especially competent to make judgments as to the ability of candidates for these awards."

She starts her study at UCLA on September 1, 1958.

Dr. Browne received numerous grants while completing her graduate work. Since then, she has been a Ford Foundation Fellow for one year at the University of London. During the summer of 1957, she received a grant to study at Stanford University under the auspices of the Social Science Research Council.

Who's Who in Iowa

Dr. Phillip C. Hubbard Has Taught Electrical Engineering At SUI for Past 17 Years

By Mrs. Frances Hawthorne

This is the tenth in a series of articles featuring Negro first, leaders and outstanding personalities in Iowa who are excelling in civic, professional, business, religious, educational, fraternal and entertainment fields.)

DR. HUBBARD

Few men of genius can attain a successful blend of the world of science—whose terminology is often incomprehensible to the average mind—with the world of every day life of family, church, community services and friends.

But Dr. Phillip G. Hubbard, associate professor of mechanics and hydraulics in the field of electrical engineering at the State University of Iowa, Iowa City—has accomplished it.

Dr. Hubbard's beam of electronic engineering destiny first came to public light during World War II. He had been working his way through electrical engineering — the field he chose instead of law or doctor because he "felt" he could accomplish it in available time and finance—when he was called into the army where he went on active duty in the corps of engineers. His astounding knowledge and mental grasp of electrical engineering science was such the army selected him for special assignment and sent him to Pennsylvania State University where he conducted research. He received a certificate stipulating he finished the course, then returning to SUI, he received his degree after three more months of study.

Named Instructor

Esteem for the young engineer's ability was so high the university would not let him go. He was given the position of instructor of Mechanics and hydraulics in 1947 and has been teaching graduate and undergraduate classes at his alma mater since.

During the intervening years he has acquired his master's and Ph.D, the latter in 1954, and was promoted to associate professor — position he now holds—in 1955.

Heads Own Company

For five years he has headed his own instrument company and has made electronic instruments—chiefly animators and scour meters—for the Army, Navy, General Electric Company, Canada and the University of the Philippines. (The instruments are used in determining dephth and measurements of the levels of river bottoms.)

Consulting Engineer

In addition he is a consulting engineer, and has lectured in Europe throughout the United States and conducted research for the past 12 years. His publications include numerous articles and four-years of collaboration with two other professors on a book which is due to come off the press early this fall.

Childhood

Early home training gave Dr. Hubbard the basic preparations for his adult career. Before he started his elementary education he knew how to read and write—to the credit of his mother-school teacher, and his father taught him the attributes of "thoroughness, thrift and sound study."

School Subjects

Although he doesn't believe a child can get too much science he thinks it should not be at the expense of other subjects, such as foreign languages, algebra and English.

"There is a need to communicate," he explained, "and we suffer because of our inability to do so."

A man with deep convictions Dr. Hubbard believes a child's direction are set at the age of 10 that punishment for erring children should be suited to the individual and spanking held to a minimum.

Enjoys Family

Dr. Hubbard enjoys his family. plays ball each evening with his children—ranging in ages from 2 to 11, joins in family singing and car rides, helps his wife Wynonna with the household duties and cooking and bathed the children when they were babies.

He is active leader in cub scout activities and coached a Little League baseball team last year. He teaches a Sunday School class of young teenagers at First Methodist church and is an active leader in community services and civic organizations.

Basic Philosophy

His religious beliefs are a vital part of his basic philosophy. It is easy to see that he can "walk" with leading men of science and converse with great minds and still not lose the common touch.

"We should bring ourselves to do what we know is right," he said. "Often when praying for guidance, we are praying for strength to do what we ourselves know is wrong."

PUTTING HUSBAND THROUGH

Ph.T. Degrees Awarded To Cornell Wives

ITHACA, N. Y. — (UPI) — The honorary "degree" of Ph. T. — "Putting Husband Through" — has been bestowed on 30 wives of Cornell university graduate students.

Decked out in academic finery, Dean John W. McConnell of the university's graduate school conferred the degree" on each wife who had aided her husband in achieving his educational goal — either an M. A. or Ph.D. degree. In keeping with a Cornell tradition, the diplomas received the "official signature of Dean Mcconnel's wife.

THE "DEGREES" were awarded in recognition of keeping the baby quiet, providing an atmosphere conducive to study, coping with financial situations which often were difficult and for general encouragement.

The 30 graduate wives had cared for 33 babies.

Little Rock Nine Gets $1,000 Aid to Scholarship Fund

Checks of $1000 each were presented to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Scholarship Fund for the nine Negro students at the recently integrated Central high school at Little Rock, by the Amalgamated Machine Instrument and Metal Local Union 485, IUE, AFL-CIO.

Received the contributions at the local's annual conference here at Manhattan Center on Jan. 22 were Roy Wilkins, executive secretary, NAACP, and Clarence A. Laws, field secretary assigned to work in Little Rock with Mrs. L. C. Bates, Arkansas State NAACP president.

Mr. Wilkins commended the labor organization on its continuing effort for human betterment and understanding and said that working with organized labor was "one of the Association's most cherished traditions."

Continuing difficulty at the Little Rock high school was reported by Mr. Laws who listed the following reasons for the worsening situation:

1. Continuing agitation by Governor Orval Faubus and other politicians;
2. Failure of federal and local law enforcement agencies to prosecute persons involved in mob violence at the school in September;
3. Failure of school officials to enunciate a firm, positive policy to cope with racial incidents; and
4. Failure of so-called responsible citizens to take a strong stand for law and order in Little Rock.

14j 1958 TRUSTEE- UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS REP. RICHARD A. HAREWOOD
NEGRO (D.CHICAGO)

NEGRO SLATED BY DEMOCRATS FOR U. OF I. JOB

P. 3

Rep. Harewood to Seek Trustee Vote

Thurs. 6-26-58

BY ROBERT HOWARD
[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Springfield, Ill., June 25—The Democratic state convention today upset an alumni committee recommendation and nominated Rep. Richard A. Harewood [D., Chicago], a Negro, for trustee of the University of Illinois.

Harewood is the first Negro to be nominated by either party for a state-wide office in Illinois.

Richard J. Nelson of Evanston, who was an administrative assistant to former Gov. Adlai tevenson, was dropped from the slate to make room for Harewood, who received a bachelor of arts degree from the University of Illinois in 1922 and a doctor of laws degree from the University of Chicago in 1926.

Decatur Man Picked

The other trustee nominations went to Harold Pogue of Decatur, a former trustee, and Howard Clement of Des Plaines, a patent attorney. With Nelson, they had been recommended by a committee of Democratic alumni. Alumni recommendations have been ignored infrequently in the past.

Harewood was elected to the legislature as a Republican in 1936 and as a Democrat in 1956. He was not renominated at the April primary.

The placing of Harewood on the state ticket was dictated by Mayor Daley, who served as keynote speaker and permanent chairman of the first session of the Democratic convention. The delegates will reconvene in Chicago sometime in September to adopt a platform during a precinct captains' rally.

Nomination Kept Secret

The word that the Chicago organization would get one of the three trusteeship nominations spread among delegates before Daley's special plane arrived, but not until a few minutes before the session ended was it revealed who would get the post. It had been assumed that either Nelson or Clement would be out, since both come from the Cook county suburbs.

Charles F. Brannan of Denver, who was secretary of agriculture in the Truman administration, will address a $25 a plate fund raising dinner tonight. He has been a leading critic of Ezra Taft Benson, secretary of agriculture.

In view of current farm prosperity, with top hogs and cattle selling for more than $20, the selection of Brannon for a campaign speech surprised Republican leaders, who have ceased to regard Benson as a campaign liability.

Lohman Talks on Farms

Sheriff Joseph H. Lohman, the Democratic nominee for state treasurer, spoke on "continually fading farm income" during a convention speech. He criticized everything from the Eisenhower foreign policy, which he termed "vacuous," to Republicans who cleaned up the 1956 Hodge scandal in the state auditor's office.

Warren Wright, the Republican nominee for third term as state treasurer, was called a "retread" by Lohman. The sheriff denounced Wright for writing to bankers for campaign help and for not knowing that Hodge had forged indorsements on state warrants.

Daley Raps G. O. P.

Daley told the delegates that Republicans had opposed enactment of national and state welfare programs "which are the only thing holding os up in one of the great recessions of America." In a reference to the troubles of Sherman Adams, Presidential assist, Daley rebuked Republicans for "claiming a monopoly on honesty and integrity."

Sen. Douglas [D., Ill.] in a speech scheduled for delivery at the dinner expressed sorrow over actions that "bring the high office of the Presidency into disrepute and injure the United States in the eyes of the world."

William Lodge of Monticello, Piatt county, was elected chairman of the Democratic County Chairmen's association. He was first vice chairman when the group was organized last fall by opponents of the Democratic Federation of Illinois, which has been more critical of Daley and other party leaders.

Other officers are Leo Fitzgerald of Ashland, Cass county, and William E. Smith of Peoria, vice chairmen; Joseph Tumpak of Downers Grove, secretary, and James McLaughlin, Mount Vernon, treasurer. Smith and Tumpak are serving their first terms as county chairmen and come from populous counties which have been under Republican domination.

A. & T. Husband-Wife Team In Joint Research

GREENSBORO, N. C. — A research project which could have possible application in the treatment of lukemia, is underway at A. and T. College.

A husband-wife team of Dr. George C. Royal, Jr., professor of bacteriology and Dr. Gladys W. Royal, professor of chemistry, started on the project recently.

A FIRST YEAR grant of $6,900.00 has been made available by the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission in partial support of the research entitled, "Biochemical and Immunological Comparisons of Animals Protected from Radiation by Bone Marrow Treatments."

This investigation is one of a series being conducted in many laboratories with the main objective of learning more about the effects of radiation on physiological functions of animals.

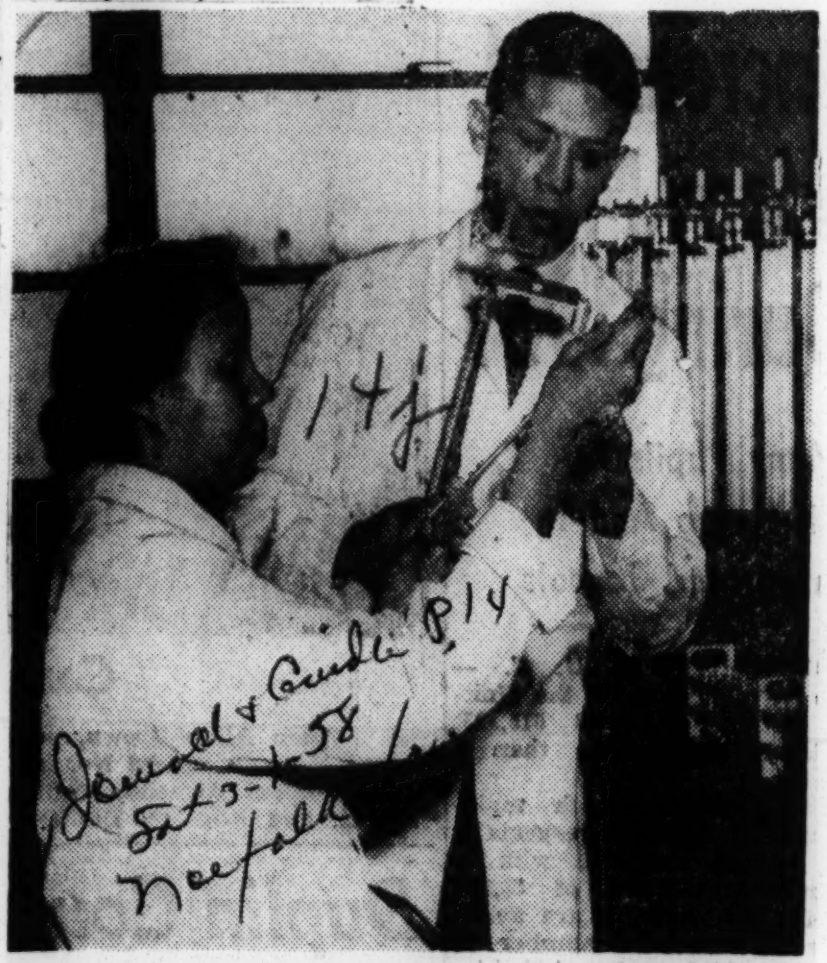
IN SOME cases, the treatment of lukemia may involve body irradiation in an attempt to destroy the disease producing cells.

The subsequent injection of bone marrow may be employed to minimize post-irradiation effects. The team is working with many animals already exposed to irradiation and supplied by the Biology Division, Oak Ridge National Laboratory.

• • •

MRS. ROYAL, who holds the Ph. D. degree in Biochemistry from Ohio State University, joined the A. and T. faculty in 1953. The husband, holder of a Ph. D. degree in Immunology from the University of Pennsylvania, came here first in 1952. The couple has two children, George III, 9 and Geraldine Gynnette, 1.



Conduct Research On Atomic Radiation

Dr. Gladys W. Royal, professor of chemistry and Dr. George C. Royal Jr., professor of biology, both of the faculty of A. and T. College, are conducting a research project at the college on the effects of atomic radiation on animal tissue.

WOODROW WILSON FELLOW

Student Earns Fellowship

BATON ROUGE, La. — Frank Daniel Posey, a June graduate of Southern university from Beaumont, Tex., has entered Pennsylvania State university to do graduate work in chemistry as a Woodrow Wilson Fellow.

Working toward a Ph. D., he plans to specialize in Physical and Organic Chemistry, and then to return to some college campus to begin his career in teaching. In preparation for this career, he has already served on the tutoring staff at his school, and has worked as laboratory supervisor in the chemistry department, instructing classes on the principles underlying the experiments which they undertake and supervising the execution of these experiments.

15 Georgia Colleges Competed

Two Clark Pupils Win Top Awards

Two senior chemistry majors of Clark College are among 15 students in Georgia colleges selected to be recipients of Woodrow Wilson Fellowships valued at $2,700.00 each.

The awards have been made to Reatha B. Clark of Meldrie, Georgia, and Aaron Kirkland from Jacksonville, Florida. Announcement of the awards came this week from Dr. Richard C. Boys, director of the program, which is supported by the Ford Foundation, and Dr. Charles Hounshell, Emory University professor and chairman of the selection committee for the southeastern region.

COMPETITIVE BASIS

As recipients of the fellowships which were awarded on a competitive basis, the Clark students will receive stipends of $1,400.00 each and may attend the graduate school of their choice. Miss Clarke has chosen the University of Chicago, and Kirkland will study at Washington University in St. Louis.

The Clark students were among 6,000 students in 34 different fields in schools throughout the nation recommended by their teachers for the fellowships. They were among nominees selected from 15 geographical regions of the U. S. and Canada and by nearly 100 regional committee members, and were among 1,080 students who survived the screening process. Final selections were made by a national committee after examination of academic records and personal interviews.

OUTSTANDING ACHIEVEMENTS

The awards climax outstanding achievements at Clark by both students. Miss Clarke, the College's Homecoming Queen this year, ranks as one of the top scholars on the campus, having maintained an A average for four years. Similarly, Kirkland, who won a scholarship to travel in Europe last year, consistently appeared on the honor roll.

Both students are currently engaged in a research project concerning structure of carbohydrate polymers under the direction of Dr. Alfred S. Spriggs, chairman of the Department of Chemistry at Clark. The findings of this research will be presented at Alabama State College April 11-12 during a joint meeting of the National Institute of Science and Beta Kappa Chi Society.

This award was the second major science grant made available to a Clark student during the year. Earlier Robert Montgomery was selected to participate for the second time in a Radio Corporation of America Scholarship program which has been set up to include Clark and 20 other colleges throughout the nation.

Two NCC Students Win Wilson Fellowships Worth Over 4 G's

James L. Atwater, 1953 honor graduate, was NCC's first Woodrow Wilson fellow. He later received a master's degree in English literature from the University of Pennsylvania.

Miss Fair, 21, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Fair, 88 Bartlett Street, Asheville. She graduated from Asheville's Stephens Lee High School.

Chambers, also 21, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Chambers, Route 1, Gilead. He is a graduate of Peabody High School in his home town.

Chambers, president of NCC's Student Government Association and Miss Fair, senior counselor, were among 1,080 selectees from a nominee's list that exceeded the 6,000 mark.

The fellowships are made possible by the Ford Foundation, which granted $24.5 million to the program a year ago.

The fellowships originated at Princeton University in 1945. In 1952, they were out on a nationwide basis under the jurisdiction of the American Association of Universities, underwritten jointly by the 37 universities in the Association of Graduate Schools and grants from the Carnegie Corporation, the General Education Board, and currently, the Ford Foundation, which will support the program entirely for the next five years.

3 Arrested — Phillips High Fracas

Student Hurt, Officer Hit In Clashes

Outsiders Warned By Connor To Stay Away From Schools

BY BILL MOBLEY AND GEORGE COOK

Police Commissioner Eugene Conner yesterday warned persons having no business at city schools to stay away from them.

And he emphasized the warning with regard to non-residents of Birmingham.

The commissioner's statement followed a series of incidents at Phillips High School in downtown Birmingham during registration of students yesterday.

A large number of persons had gathered in the area around the school, apparently in anticipation of a renewed effort to enroll Negroes in the all-white school.

During the course of the morning:

A Phillips High student suffered a gash over his left eye requiring seven stitches when he was hit by a brick.

An officer was struck by a rock-filled soft drink can.

Three non-residents of Birmingham were arrested on charges of loitering after warning and refusing to obey a lawful order of a police officer.

And a number of reports of racial fights were made by telephone to Police Headquarters. Investigation showed them to be false.

In his statement yesterday afternoon Connor declared:

"We don't need any help—and particularly from out-of-towners—to keep our schools segregated.

"As long as Birmingham keeps the segregation laws on the books and as long as I am commissioner no Negroes are going to white schools.

"The Birmingham Police Dept. is able to take care of any situation that may arise if any colored persons attempt to enroll.

"If we need help, we will get it from other law enforcement agencies and not from some organization composed of individuals who have their own ideas on how it should be done."

The student injured yesterday morning was John Brand, 16, son of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene B. Brand of 3928 40th-st, n.

Young Brand was struck by a brick thrown by an unidentified Negro youth.

The Negro was one of five passing through the Phillips High School area who were chased by a group of white students.

Police intercepted the Negroes about a block away from the school after they fled, but let them go, being unaware at the time of the rock throwing.

The first trouble with the crowd began shortly after 1 p.m. when an unidentified Negro man complained to Officer I. C. Casey that the people had blocked him.

He told the officer he was trying to get to Eighth-av, and 26th-st, n, and was not allowed to proceed up Eighth-av, or Seventh.

Officer Casey reported the man was blocked from front and behind.

Officer Casey said he escorted the man to 23rd-st, where the crowd moved in on the Negro and cut him off from the officer.

Casey got off his motor and went into the crowd after the complaint when he was struck on the back of the head with the drink can filled with rocks.

He said he took a foot-long piece of auto axle from one man and a drink bottle, wrapped in yesterday morning's paper, from another.

He said he rescued the Negro from the crowd, composed of students and grown men, and proceeded to the middle of the block where he called for help from a phone booth.

Officer Casey reported to Sgt. J. E. McDonald that as he attempted to get the crowd to disperse, one man in the crowd asserted he had the some rights there as the officer.

Casey said the man pulled a deputy sheriff's badge, No. 47, but did not in any way attempt to aid the officer.

Sgt. McDonald reported to Chief Moore he went to the aid of the other officer and saw three men sitting on the steps of a Central City apartment.

He said he asked them to move on, and they told him they were visiting there. When he asked who they were visiting they pointed to a man in the crowd.

Sgt. McDonald asked the man where he lived and he gave a distant address.

He then reported the trio moved along down the street but went into the entrance to another apartment. He said he followed them to the top floor and encountered them coming down stairs.

Teh sergeant said they told him they were looking for apartment A. He said it was on the ground floor.

That's when he made the arrests, he told the chief.

Scheduled to come to trial this morning on charges of loitering after warning and refusing to obey a lawful order of a police officer are:

Floyd Bearden of 2241 Sumpter-st, Shades Mountain.

Robert Bradshaw, 1413 National-st, Tarrant.

David O. Rollins, 1451 Whorton-av, Tarrant.

The three men were arrested after officers received instructions to clear the area of the crowd that had gathered at the school during the morning.

During the early hours of registration, school officials were able to keep most of the students inside the building.

However, as the morning wore on students began congregating about the building and joining groups of adults who had stationed themselves at strategic points across the streets from the various exits of the schools.

Police said students, looking for excitement, were responsible for a large part of the commotion.

Additional police were sent to the scene when it appeared that the crowd was not going to disperse of its own accord and was showing signs of becoming unruly.

It was at this time the two Tarrant men and the Shades Mountain man were arrested by Sgt. J. E. McDonald.

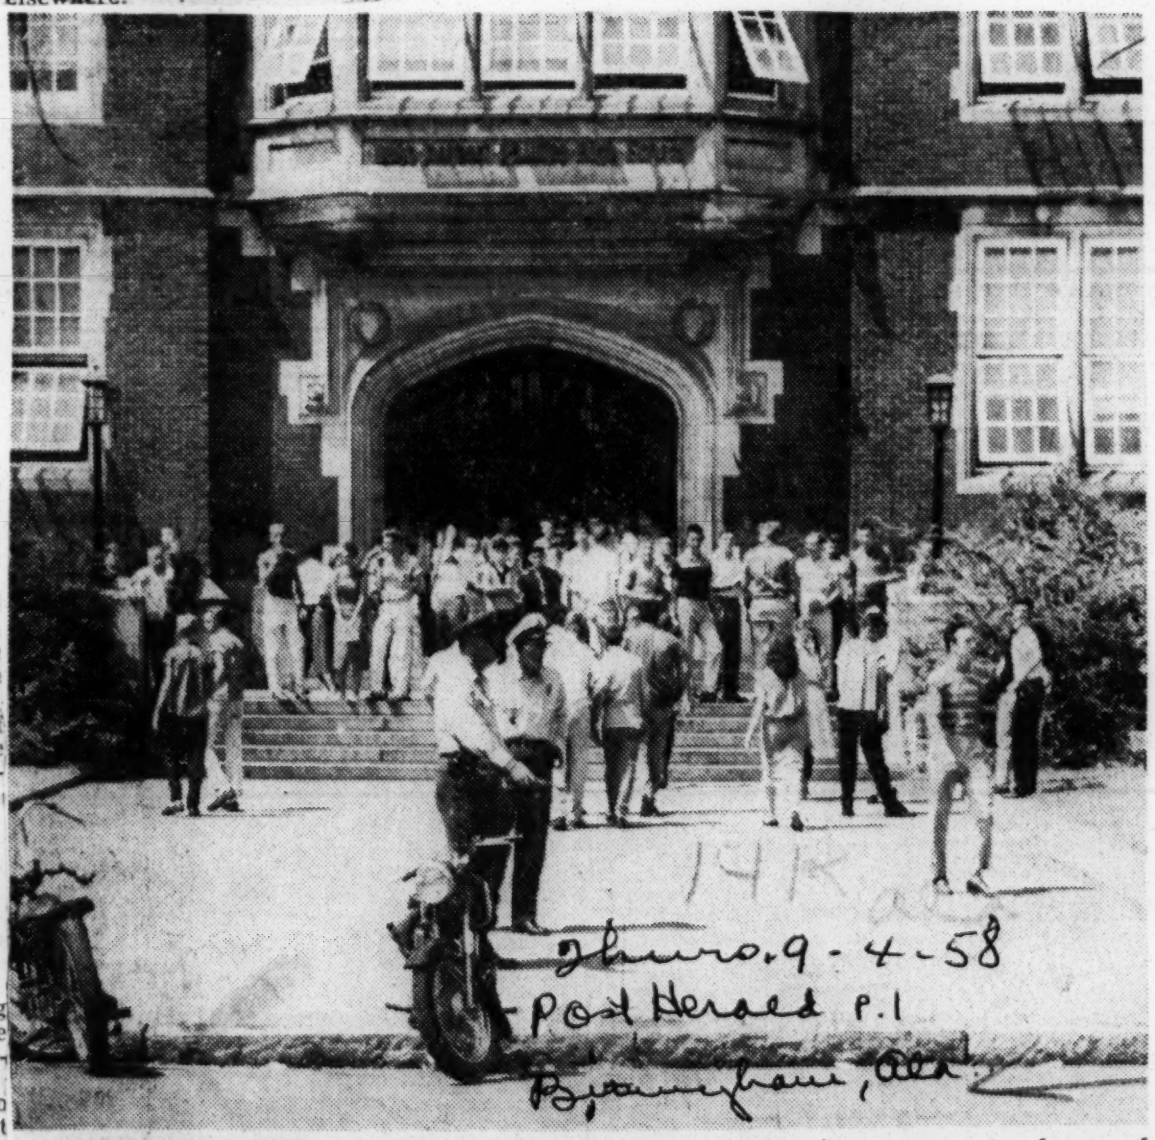
As the three men were being brought to City Hall bits of paper were observed being thrown from the rear vehicle.

Gathered up by police and examined at headquarters, they were found to be Ku Klux Klan literature.

The scene at Woodlawn High School, also thought to be a target for desegregation, remained quiet.

Unlike Phillips, no group congregated near the school. Students came and went in an orderly fashion and no incident marred opening day.

One traffic officer patrolled the area on a motorcycle until 9:30. He then was dispatched elsewhere.



KEEPING ORDER—Police officers who kept passers-by moving in front of Phillips High School are shown in foreground while students come and go through main entrance of the downtown school.

Negro High School Burns At Florence

FLORENCE (AP) — Burrell - Slater High School's 350 Negro students began their Christmas holidays today because the school's 15-room building was destroyed by fire Wednesday night.

It was the only Negro high school in Florence.

School Supt. Rufus Hibbett said "We have no suspicion that the fire was caused by anything but an accident."

A replacement for the burned building would cost $300,000 to $400,000, Hibbett said. The building was about 30 years old.

The blaze apparently began about 9 p.m. in the attic of the one-story structure.

Hibbett said classes will be resumed in temporary buildings after the holidays. All Florence schools were given a special fire inspection last week following the heavy loss of life at a Chicago school.

Judge Withholds Ruling In Ousted Student Case

MOBILE (AP)—A circuit Judge Friday withheld a ruling in the case of a high school girl who was suspended for refusing to attend physical education classes on religious grounds.

Circuit Judge Robert T. Ervin Jr., did not indicate when he will hand down a ruling. Ten witnesses were heard during the two-day hearing of a motion by the girl's father seeking to force the county school board to reinstate her.

The father, the Rev. Lasco Mitchell, testified Thursday he would not permit his daughter, 15-year-old Eulene, to attend the physical education classes because he believed the gym outfits worn were immodest and therefore sinful.

She was suspended from Vigor High School Nov. 12 after refusing to go to the gym classes.

An attorney for Mitchell contended in closing arguments that the school board "is trying to make him compromise his beliefs." Mitchell is pastor of the Mobile Bible Missionary Church, a Holiness Church with about 20 members.

A school board attorney answered. "We are not asking the reverend to alter his religion beliefs.

"But if he wants his daughter educated at public expense, it is essential that he forego some of the rigidity of his notion of what constitutes modesty in dress — not in the dress of his daughter but in the dress of the instructor."

Principal James A. McPherson of Vigor said he told the Mitchells that he could not excuse the girl from the classes because state law requies that students take the physical education training.

The principal said school officials offered to permit the girl to attend the classes in regular clothes and also would excuse her from portions of the physical training program to which her father objected. He said Mitchell refused.

McPherson also said several girls in each class wear skirts instead of the customary gym outfits.

Mrs. Lois Douglas, physical education teacher at Vigor, showed the court a typical gym suit of shorts and attached blouse, and an optional skirt.

Education: An Embarrassment In Alabama

THERE was drama in Auburn's loss of accreditation in its mechanical and electrical divisions, coinciding as it did with the football team's winning a national championship. There was no connection between the two events, but their happening coincidentally excited more comment than educational matters customarily receive.

It remains a melancholy fact that education in general, despite its imperative role in society, receives not a tenth of the attention it deserves. This, in a way, is a tribute to those who work in education, for if they were thieves and grafters, grossly incompetent, indifferent to their responsibilities, there would be controversy and attention—and controversy generally has constructive results.

Thus, ironically, because it is generally accepted that educators do the best they can with what they've got, there is complacency and inattention.

AS to the Auburn incident, State Supt. A. R. Meadows is right in saying that there are other serious deficiencies in Alabama education that are even "more frightening" but overlooked. He referred specifically to the fact that about two out of three of Alabama's 341 white high schools are not eligible for accreditation by the Southern Association of Secondary Schools.

Most of these high schools have never applied for accreditation because, according to Dr. Meadows, "the principals know they cannot meet regional standards." It would be a waste of time.

These qualifications which most Alabama high schools lack do not demand unreasonable standards — merely such basic things as a library with so many books for each student; no more students in each class than a teacher can hope to instruct.

It happens that in Alabama no state money is allocated specifically for libraries. Schools which enjoy such luxuries acquire them with money from local tax sources, or by using state money marked for some other purpose.

As for teacher-pupil ratios, Alabama cannot be choosy. It is difficult enough, because of low salary schedules, to attract enough teachers for extraordinarily large classes. Reducing the size of classes, even if that were possible, would create a demand for additional teachers, a demand that is not met now.

Out of 23,500 teachers in Alabama, some 4,000 hold "emergency certificates." When a principal certifies that he cannot staff his school with qualified teachers, he may apply for permission to issue emergency certificates. These may be issued to anyone, even a person who never saw the inside of a teachers college.

THE situation worsens each year, as more and more graduates of Alabama teachers colleges go to neighboring states—Florida, for instance—where pay is as much as $1,000 a year more.

Alabama cannot boast of its education record. In the past few years, Georgia has spent about $300,000,000 for new school construction. South Carolina has spent about $150,000,000. Alabama, which has never approved a state bond issue for school building, spent a fraction of this.

IT MAY be that the re-examination of our educational facilities, brought on by Russia's scientific advances, will filter down to the secondary school level in Alabama, and produce some changes.

Whatever major changes are effected, however, will not be the result of miracles. Sputnik can stimulate interest; it cannot supply the money and initiative.

3 Federal Statutes Authorize Ike's Action In Sending Troops To Arkansas

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — The action of President Eisenhower in sending Federal troops to Little Rock to prevent obstruction of the enforcement of the Federal court order for desegregation of Central high school there was authorized by three Federal statutes, the Justice Depatment maintains.

The question was raised anew by Senator Sam J. Ervin, Democrat, of North Carolina, in cross examining W. Wilson White in his appearance Tuesday before the Senate Judiciary Committee for questioning on his nomination by Mr. Eisenhower to be the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the newly created Civil Rights Division in the Justice Department.

For answer to questions concerning the authority of the President in ordering 1200 tough paratroops of the Regular Army to Little Rock and federalizing the Arkansas National Guard, Mr. White referred Ervin and other members of the Judiciary Committee to the brief filed by the Justice Department in an appeal from a Federal District Court order.

The appeal is pending in the United States Court of Appeals at St. Louis. It was taken by two students who formerly attended Central high school in Little Rock, and their mother, who sued on their behalf and also as a "citizen, tax-payer and patron" of the Little Rock School District.

After the complaint was filed, however, the two students withdrew from Central high and their credits were sent to the Mabelvale high school at Mabelvale, Ark.

The complaint attacked the constitutionality of the three Acts of Congress, pursuant to which military forces were sent to Little Rock to enforce the Federal District Court orders for removal of obstructions to justice in the case of nine little colored children after Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas had called out the Arkansas National Guard to bar their admission to Central high.

The Federal District Court at Little Rock ruled that the complaint presented no substantial constitutional question, and dismissed it for lack of jurisdiction. The plaintiffs appealed.

In its brief, the Justice Department says both the President's proclamation of last Sept. 23, and his executive order of Sept. 24, which directed the Secretary of Defense to use military forces to enforce the Federal District Court orders for desegregation of Central high school, were issued pursuant to Title 10 of the United States Code, sections 332, 333 and 334.

Section 332 authorizes the President to use such of the armed forces and the state militia as he considers necessary to enforce "the laws of the United States" whenever he considers that unlawful obstructions make it impracticable to enforce such laws by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings.

Section 333 authorizes the President to use the armed forces and the militia to suppress any insurrection, domestic violence, etc., if it opposes or obstructs the execution of "the laws of the United States" or impedes the course of justice under those laws.

The brief states that troops were stationed at Central high school to remove and prevent forcible obstructions to the carrying out of the Federal District Court order that the school be integrated.

The court order, the Justice Department declares, "was an enforcement of the constitutional right of the colored school children not to be denied by the authorities of the state of Arkansas the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the 14th Amendment."

The Justice Department contends that the phrase "the laws of the United States," as used in the applicable statutes, "covers not merely acts of Congress but federal law in its broader sense, including the Federal Constitution and orders of a federal court enforcing constitutional rights," such as the Federal District Court order for integration of Central high.

The constitutionality of sections 332 and 333, the Justice Department asserts, is confirmed by repeated and long continued executive practice of the Presidents, beginning with George Washington, in using troops to put down forcible resistance and obstruction to the execution of the laws.

The list of such instances, exclusive of those in which the President acted at the request of state authorities, includes the slave insurrection of 1831, the Shadrach Case, disturbance in Kansas in 1856, John Brown at Harper's Ferry, the South Carolina riots of 1871, and the race riots in Washington, D. C., in 1919.

The Slave Insurrections of 1831: On the basis of reports of apprehended uprising of the slaves in various areas in the South, in 1831 contingents of the Army were, with the approval of President Andrew Jackson, sent to the areas in question.

Disturbance in Kansas, 1856: After the creation of the Territory of Kansas in 1854, the pro-slavery and anti-slavery groups who emigrated there engaged in violent clashes.

President Franklin Pierce in February, 1856, issued a proclamation commanding all persons engaging in unlawful combinations against the Territory of Kansas or the United States to disperse and warning them that any attempted insurrection in Kansas or aggressive intrusion into that territory would be resisted by the armed forces of the government in addition to the local militia.

Federal troops in Kansas were instructed to aid the Governor of the territory to suppress any armed resistance to the execution of the law. In response to requisitions by the territorial Governor, federal troops were several times furnished for that purpose.

John Brown at Harper's Ferry, 1859: When John Brown and his party seized the government armory and arsenal at Harper's Ferry, President James Buchanan signed a proclamation for the use of troops, which he gave to the officer commanding the federal troops which had been sent to Harper's Ferry, to be published there.

The troops speedily overcame John Brown's party, however, and the President's proclamation was not published.

South Carolina Riots, 1871: With the rise of the Ku Klux Klan after the Civil War, there were many riots and acts of violence in South Carolina.

In 1871 President Ulysses S. Grant issued a proclamation, specifying certain counties in South Carolina as places where armed combinations existed so powerful as to be able to defy the constiuted authorities and commanding persons composing such combinations to disperse and deliver their arms to Army officers.

When this command was not obeyed, the President stationed federal troops at various points in the state and arrested all known members of the Ku Klux Klan.

Race riots in Washington, D. C., 1919: Upon the outbreak of fighting between colored persons and whites in Washington, D. C., in 1919, during President Woodrow Wilson's administration, the Secretary of War ordered the use of troops to maintain peace.

The Government's brief in the Little Rock case, on appeal, is signed by Assistant Attorney General George Cochran Dour, Osro Cobb, United States Attorney at Little Rock, and Samuel D. Slade and Donald B. MacGuineas, attorney in the Justice Department here.

Can't Stop Integration, Department Of Justice Says

WASHINGTON—The Justice Department Friday declared it could not suspend integration at Central High School in Little Rock, Ark., where a school board earlier Thursday held a hearing on a suspended white youth.

The Justice Department said it had no authority to intervene in a federal court move. The Little Rock school board petitioned to have integration halted, pending a clear definition of the "deliberate speed" phrase in the U. S. Supreme Court's public school desegregation order.

The Little Rock school board held a meeting Friday morning on the suspension of 16-year-old Sammie Dean Parker who was put out Monday for distributing cards which proclaimed: "One down, eight to go."

The crack was aimed at Minnie Jean Brown, one of nine Negroes enrolled at the school in September, who was expelled Monday for reasons not yet disclosed by the board. It was reported, however, that she had been involved in several racial incidents.

The board barred the girl's lawyer, Amis Guthridge, and newsmen from the closed meeting. Guthridge threatened to file malfeasance charges against the board if Sammie Dean is not reinstated.

The board was also scheduled to hear the case of Howard Cooper who was also suspended Monday for parading the card.

Minnie Brown is expected to enroll in the New Lincoln School in New York City. She accepted a $1,050 scholarship to the private institution.

Eight Negroes are still attending Central High which has been under federal troop protection since September 25.

The petition which asked an indefinite stay of integration at the school, was signed by all members of the school board and by School Superintendent Virgil Blossom. The petition asked that "the plan of integration heretofore ordered by the court be realistically reconsidered in the light of existing conditions."

It was reportedly presented on the recommendation of 24 top business and civic leaders.

School Accreditation Standards Lower In State, Meadows Says

Alabama school accreditation standards generally are lower than requirements of the Southern regional accrediting agency on at least six different points, School Superintendent A. R. Meadows said yesterday.

Meadows said he had made the comparative evaluation with standards of the Southern Assn. of Secondary Schools and Colleges "to inform the public in the light of recent criticism of certain state systems."

The six points listed by Meadows were:

1. The association requires all teachers to have a degree. The state says a non-degree teacher may continue working if hired prior to 1943 when school was accredited.

2. Principals are required to have Masters degree with major part of graduation study in administration and supervision, under association rules. State requires only bachelor's degree.

3. Association calls for $1.50 per pupil up to 500 pupils and $1.25 per pupil for 501 to 1,000 enrollment in library standards. State library standards require minimum annual expenditure of $1.25 per pupil in average daily attendance.

4. Association sets minimum teacher's salary at $3,000 and an average salary of $3,400. State has no set minimum and no established average.

5. Association requires that principal receive highest salary in his school. State makes no such provision and according to Meadows there are some cases where he is not the highest paid.

6. Association requires that athletics and all other extracurricular activities, and all related funds, be controlled by the school administration. State has no such requirement.

Meadows explained that in some cases Alabama athletic facilities still are maintained and managed by private interests.

Negroes Spurn Private School Bid

On the Integration Front!

(By Courier Press Service)

LITTLE ROCK—By not replying to an offer by Governor Faubus to give financial help to set up privately financed schools for Negroes, Little Rock's Negro citizenry has indicated that there is no wavering in the battle for complete school integration.

Among the other developments on the integration front are the following:

Dr. George Gallup, director of the American Institute of Public Opinion, in Princeton, N.J., said that a growing number of white Southerners, faced with one setback after another in the courts, admit, "however reluctantly that they believe general integration will eventually come to the South."

In Clinton, N.Y., the Hamilton College Chapter of Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity reported that because it insisted on a policy of non-discrimination in membership, the national organization of the fraternity, revoked the Hamilton charter.

Also in Little Rock, Gov. Orval Faubus sharply criticized the local school board for refusing to release public school teachers for hire as tutors in private schools designed to circumvent the Supreme Court's integration order.

And the Little Rock Private School Corp., set-up to direct the private school set-up, reported that it is receiving between $3,000 and $4,000 a day and expects to begin classes soon.

THERE WILL be no repeat performance of Arkansas National Guard troops upholding segregated schools.

The U.S. Supreme Court made this plain Monday by refusing to review an appeal by Faubus of an Appellate Court decision enjoining the Governor against the use of troops to interfere with integration.

The City Commission of Birmingham, Ala., seemingly in a face-saving move, said that its members were "unanimous in our conviction that segregation on buses should be maintained in the interests of both white and Negro races," as it repealed the bus segregation law which the 1954 Negro busy boycott movement fought against.

Bullied, Girls Go 25 Miles To Negro High

OZARK, Ark.—Because Ozark has only one high school which whites feel is their exclusive province, three Negro girls who tried to attend integrated classes and were rebuffed after two intervals, are now commuting 25 miles daily by bus to the nearest Negro high school in Clarksville, Ark.

The girls, Nola Kuykendall, 17; Ivy West, 14, and Joan Johnson, 13, all of Ozark, entered the Ozark High School when it was voluntarily integrated by the school board at the opening of the fall semester in 1957 but were advised by the city marshal to go home at the end of their second day in school.

They went home but returned to the school several months later and completed the 1957-58 year. This fall they came back.

SEVERAL WEEKS ago, a group of 10 white boys and girls bullied the Negro girls during school hours and when Principal R. L. Graves took the colored youngsters into his office, white students threatened to push past the principal as the latter guarded the door. The girls were sent home by the principal and have not returned since.

Lena Horne Praises Stand Taken By Kids At Little Rock School

EDITOR'S NOTE — This is third in a series of an interview with Lena Horne, as appears in current issue of Datebook magazine now on stands. In last week's chapter Miss Horne was talking of early advice she gave her two children when they first faced the problems of bias. The interview continues:

"How about later?" I asked. "What sort of advice have you given them since that time?"

"It hasn't changed much," she said. "I've warned them to make sure that they never let their guards down, never leave themselves open to be hurt. I guess, in a way, I teach them to live with insecurity — because for Negroes there is a certain security in the total acceptance of this kind of insecurity. My children are prepared to be discriminated against. Now, mind you I don't say they should accept it—just expect it."

I felt awful. Because she was right.

"Can we go back to the current integration question?" I asked.

"Sure," she said. "But isn't it all the same thing?"

"I guess so," I said. "But you've given your own children advice, now what advice would you give to the kids in a newly integrated or about-to-be-integrated school like Central High in Little Rock?"

"I can't give them advice! Look what I did when I was faced with a much milder situation. I snatched up my babies and sent them away where they'd be safe. Maybe I was wrong — but I was acting like a mother, not like a symbol. I was able to protect my children—and I did. Everybody has to act in the way best suited for himself. If those Negro kids in Little Rock can stand the gaff—I think continuing is a fabulous thing to do. And I wouldn't presume to give them advice as to how to act—they've done beautifully without my advice."

LENA HORNE IS SHOWN with daughter Gail, now a college student, on an early visit abroad. Scene is the London zoo, one of the many sights the famous artist carried her daughter through.

"How about the white students? Any advice for them?" I asked.

"What can I say? I think that a good part of the whole business is just plain juvenile delinquency. Many of the kids who play hookey are looking for a good excuse—and the fact that some parents, teachers and officials condone it, makes it a perfect deal for them. Maybe there are some that feel strongly against Negroes. But this is due to their upbringing and a word from me is not going to change them. They'll learn—but not overnight."

"Does that mean you believe in more gradual integration?"

"Really, how gradual can you get? If you've got to do something, you do it. Look, remember just a few months ago New York City was full of jaywalkers and nothing illegal and were doing something about it by a cer- force anti-jaywalking laws. The newspapers publicized it, there were campaigns on radio and TV. York Cops on the beat stopped jaywalkers and explained that they were doing something illegal and would have to quit it by a certain date or they would receive tain tickets. All the know-it-alls, all organizations, the police department, the Mayor—and decided that it would never work. New Yorkers had to solve the accident problem was to really enforce against the lights for too long a time, they said—that the way to solve the accident problem was to really enforce against the lights for too long a time, people just don't change overnight.

"Well, they did. Stand at Fifth Avenue and 42nd Street now and watch how the crowds wait for the sign to say 'Walk.' They obey the law because the law is enforced. And also, because deep down within them they know that it is for their own good."

"Are you comparing jaywalking to racial discrimination?" I asked.

"No. I'm comparing full enforcement of the law to disregard for it. What some people forget is that school integration is not only a principle—its a law."

"What about the fear in the South that integration will lead to intermarriage?" I asked. I was a delicate question and she looked over at her husband and smiled.

"Marriage is a pretty personal thing. Nobody gets forced into marriage these days. Interracial marriages usually create such heartbreaking situations that anybody who's not strong enough and not deeply enough in love should never even consider it.

"But you don't marry a boy because he sits in the same classroom as you—you marry him because your interests are similar, your backgrounds compatible, because you want to share your life with him. So, that's a phony issue—intermarriage. It's a problem, sure, but it's not a school integration problem."

Negroes Scared Off By Whites

VAN BUREN, Ark. (AP)—Belligerent white youths apparently blocked integration today at Van Buren High School, which was desegregated a year ago under federal court order.

A group of white boys waited outside the building this morning, saying they would prevent Negroes from entering the school. But other observers reported that none of the Negro pupils appeared.

What Lies Ahead Is Unknown

How Do Little Rock High Students Fare?

The public high schools of Little Rock, Ark., have been closed since the beginning of the school year to block racial integration. Private, segregated institutions are trying to fill the gap. Here is a report on how they're making out, written by a southern native who is now on the staff of The Charlotte (N.C.) Observer.

By LARRY JINKS
Miami Herald-Chicago News Wire

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Inside the ugly, ancient headquarters building of the Little Rock Private School Corp. there is a no-nonsense atmosphere.

From Supt. W. E. Brashears down through the student body, everyone seems determined to prove that this emergency experiment in private education will work.

One reason for the generally high spirit may well be dedication to the cause of segregation.

A visitor notices a small Confederate flag sticker on a glass door. He hears a secretary speak warmly of donations and messages of encouragement from all over the south.

The corporation was formed by ardent opponents of integration to fill the vacuum when Gov. Orval Faubus closed Little Rock's public high schools.

The main building now in use was once an orphanage and later a University of Arkansas graduate studies center. Classes are also held at a nearby Methodist church.

AFTER SIX WEEKS of operation, the private high school has a student body of 830 — a fraction of Little Rock's regular high school population of 3,700 (of whom nearly 3,000 are white).

Another 350 students are in Baptist High School, operated in Little Rock's second Baptist Church by Ouachita College.

In contrast to the corporation's school. Baptist High is pointedly "neither segregationist or integrationist."

The atmosphere in its improvised classrooms is a bit more relaxed but there, too, education is clearly the aim.

ACCORDING to a survey just completed for Southern School News, 1,299 Little Rock students are in private schools on a full-time basis, 527 others get part-time education by mail or in private classes, 1,168 have transferred to other public schools in the state, about 100 are in schools outside the state and about 600 apparently are getting no education.

(The last figure includes many of the Negroes).

Attention has centered on the two chief private high schools as the likeliest long-range answers to the school dilemma.
